Finally some good news for the Tampa Bay area for when the housing market recuperates. A Pew Research Center national relocation survey found that 34 percent of respondents would live in Tampa if given the choice. We ranked among the top five most popular cities, along with Denver, San Diego, Seattle and Orlando. Least favored cities included Cleveland, Detroit and Cincinnati. Pew conducted the telephone poll of 2,260 adults in October. Overall, about half of all survey takers told Pew they would prefer to live somewhere else. City dwellers, particularly women, were more apt to say they wanted to move away.
