The City Council of Tampa and Celebration of Old City Hall’s Centennial book is the second part of a series that tells the history of Tampa through the people who served this great city. The book is another page turner loaded with history. In the Fall of 2013, the City of Tampa published the first in the series, The Mayors of Tampa 1856-2013, which was distributed in November 2013 during the Celebration of the City of Tampa With Our Mayors. During the celebration, five of the six living mayors attended the celebration, including the late Mayor Bill Poe.

With the centennial celebration of Old City Hall, which was built in 1915, it was determined that a spotlight should be placed on this beautiful building and its history, along with the chronology of Tampa’s City Council members.

Old City Hall, if the walls could talk, would have a lot to say. It would sound like a busy subway station with so many people talking at the same time. In the early days, the residents of Old City Hall were the Mayor, City Council, City Clerk and a few other departments. Currently, City Council and the Clerk’s Office are the remaining departments still located in the building from the beginning.

The City of Tampa would like to acknowledge the many contributors who have helped with this book. Contributors include introductions by the Honorable Judge E. J. Salcines, Historic Preservation Manager Dennis Fernandez, University of Tampa Professor of Government, Dr. Robert Kerstein, and the Honorable Councilman Charlie Miranda.

We would also like to thank W. Curtis Welch, Assistant City Archivist, for writing the first timeline, his compilation, initial research and publication about the City Council. Thanks also to intern and consultant, James Scholz, for the preliminary research and bullet points.

Thanks to Jennifer Dietz, Archives and Records Manager, for her dedication to additional research and writing; and thanks to Jeremy Rex and Sioux Winter, Graphic Artists, for their great graphic design. Thanks also to the Honorable E. J. Salcines and Dr. Robert Kerstein for editing and proofing.

There are many others to thank for their valuable assistance including City Council Legislative Aide, Mary Bryan for great contact information and coordination; Rodney Kite-Powell at the Tampa Bay History Center; David Parsons and Julio Granda at the Tampa-Hillsborough County Public Library; Elaine Lund and Dennis Fernandez at City of Tampa for assistance in obtaining photos and other information. Also, many thanks to Dave Fredericks, Judy Poole, Pam Miller and Joseph Castaneda of Archives & Records, for the wonderful job they did scanning photos.

Lastly, credit must be given to Ron Ciervo for designing the cover photo for this book depicting the old versus new landscape around Old City Hall. Additionally, thanks once again to the Office of the City Clerk, the Public Affairs Division and the Office of the Mayor for their support of this publication documenting Old City Hall’s history and that of members that served on City Council.
Old City Hall History
by Dennis Fernandez

A centennial after its construction, Tampa City Hall endures as an icon of the city’s skyline and a reminder of the early years of Tampa’s history when its future was uncertain. Despite the harsh environment found in the Florida frontier land, Tampa’s climate, location, and proximity to the Gulf of Mexico attracted early settlers who were searching for untapped economic opportunities. Although just in its infancy, the seeds had been planted for the development of a city in Tampa that its founders could hardly have envisioned.

Tampa’s first incorporation occurred in 1849, when 14 men met at the County courthouse and unanimously voted to establish the Village of Tampa. Tampa received its first City Charter from the State of Florida in December 1855. In 1858, the city’s population had climbed to about 1,000 inhabitants, though most were military personnel stationed at Fort Brooke. Following the Civil War and the deactivation of Fort Brooke, the region fell into an economic recession. As the population declined, the remaining citizens voted for the No Corporation People’s Ticket, which effectively closed the city government. In 1873, as the local economy improved, residents voted to reincorporate as the Town of Tampa. However, in 1880, the population still stood at only 720 residents. Tampa’s population exploded during the 1880s, with the development of Port Tampa and Ybor City, and the current City Charter was established by special act of the Florida Legislature in 1887.

Henry Bradley Plant, a native of Connecticut, was largely responsible for Tampa’s resurgence in the 1880s. He began his career working on steamships during the Civil War and took advantage of the bankruptcies of railroad companies in the South following the war to build his shipping empire. Plant began purchasing the land in Tampa shortly after he acquired the South Florida Railroad company in 1883.
He extended its line to Port Tampa, his deepwater harbor, in 1885. His steamship business (part of the Plant System, along with his railroad lines) connected Tampa to Key West and Havana. Plant also established hotels throughout Florida, including the Port Tampa Inn and the Moorish style Tampa Bay Hotel, which was completed in 1891.

In areas east of the city, Vicente Martinez Ybor and Ignacio Haya, two Cuban cigar manufacturers of Spanish descent, recognized the potential in Tampa’s excellent port and recently completed railroad line. They realized that the climate’s similarity to Cuba would help in the production of Havana cigars. In late 1885, Ybor and Haya both purchased land for factories and worker housing. Ybor hired engineer Gavino Gutierrez to plan his factory and housing layout. Gutierrez drew up a plan for a full-fledged city. By the end of 1886, the Ybor and Haya cigar factories were in full operation, several hundred worker houses were occupied, and many commercial establishments were open. The town’s rapid growth attracted the attention of local leaders, and in 1887, it was incorporated into the city, bringing Tampa’s population to over 5,000 residents. Tampa’s population increased dramatically over the next several decades, especially after a second cigar-producing center was established in West Tampa on the western side of the Hillsborough River.

The first City Hall was constructed in 1890, at the southeast corner of Florida Avenue and Lafayette Street. This $10,000 building housed the city council chambers, offices for the mayor, council members, city clerk, and other officials. The building also was home to the Tampa Police Department and the Fire Department headquarters. In an era before automobiles, the building included a horse stable for the Fire Department and police chief. The Fire Department was home to Engine No. 1, a hook and ladder wagon, and a chemical and hose wagon. A bell tower sat atop the southwest corner of the two-story brick building, and a free-standing fire alarm box stood outside the building at the street corner.

In the early 1900s, Tampa's downtown was composed of a mix of uses. While the Moorish style Hillsborough County Courthouse sat majestically to the north across Lafayette Street, a 1903 Sanborn Fire Insurance Company map indicated that wood frame residences were located directly south and east of the first City Hall. The Knight Block, a row of commercial buildings, sat just west of City Hall on Franklin Street. The Knight Block included a three-story brick building that housed a drugstore on the first story, offices on the second floor, and lodging above. The remainder of the block was composed of one-story shops, including a wholesale liquor store, two saloons, and a billiards hall.

In 1912, Mayor D.B. McKay proposed a bond issue to generate monies for public improvements, including $235,000 for a new City Hall. Twenty-six firms submitted design proposals. Bayard C. Bonfoey and M. Leo Elliott, prominent local architects, won the competition. They also designed other notable buildings in Tampa, including the Centro Asturiano and the Tampa YMCA. The City Hall building was designed as a symbol of hope for Tampa's changing image from frontier town to a substantial customs port and a leader in clear Havana cigar manufacturing. The new City Hall was lauded as the “Spirit of Tampa” in local papers as a monument to Tampa's growth.
M. Leo Elliott (1886-1967) was born in Woodstock, New York. He attended Cooper’s Institute in New York City and trained at the New York City firm of Welch, Smith & Provost. In 1907, he moved to Tampa and formed a partnership with B.C. Bonfoey. Bonfoey (1872-1953) was born in Connecticut and served in the U.S. Army in the Spanish American War. Bonfoey and Elliott’s partnership was dissolved in 1917. Elliott went on to design Tampa’s Italian Club, Cuban Club, Masonic Temple, and several other buildings in downtown Tampa, Davis Islands, Temple Terrace, and Sarasota. Bonfoey retired from practice following a stroke in 1928.

Bonfoey and Elliott designed a ten-story City Hall and a three-story police department directly to the south connected by a second-story skywalk (a feature unique from other entries) with 35,000 square feet of office space. At the time, City Hall was the tallest building south of Jacksonville. Constructed from concrete, the building consisted of a three-story 93’ square base, an eight-story shaft of 49’ square, and a 30’ square tower on the ninth floor topped by a four-sided clock, copper dome, and single flagpole. The building measured 165.5’ from base to roof. At the time, the Tampa Tribune described the new building as “Tampa’s City Hall Layer Cake.”

City Council, however, did not find the funds for the clockworks. Hortense Oppenheimer, the daughter of prominent Tampa physician Louis Sims Oppenheimer, led the campaign by the “Town Criers” that raised $1,200 to help pay for the clock. W.H. Beckwith Jewelry Company donated the remainder necessary to provide the 2,840 pound, four-faced clock, which was built by the Seth Thomas Company of Vermont. Prior to the completion of City Hall, the clock was nicknamed “Hortense the Beautiful” in honor of its benefactor, and it retains this name today.
With its symmetrical design, classical motifs, and elaborate terra cotta detailing, the architects’ design for City Hall incorporated Beaux Arts architectural references into its traditional tripartite construction. The Beaux Arts style was popularized at the 1893 Chicago World’s Fair: Columbian Exhibition, which featured approximately 200 buildings constructed in this style. Several monumental exhibit halls were built as part of the “White City,” which inspired the City Beautiful Movement and shaped modern city planning.

Ground was broken on July 18, 1914, by Mrs. Maria Moore Post, widow of the fifth Mayor of Tampa, Madison Post. City Hall was constructed by McGucken and Hyer, Contractors, in a timely manner in only 14 months. It was completed on August 30, 1915. In a special ceremony led by Mayor D.B. McKay on the following Saturday evening, the entire building was illuminated from base to dome, including the Roman-numeralued face of Hortense the Beautiful. Professor Walter E. Cobb, leader of Heidt’s Municipal Band, composed a special “City Hall March” to commemorate the occasion.

The base layer of the building consists of three floors and contains five bays on each façade. The north and east elevations are clad in rusticated granite on the first story. A 1915 cornerstone sits at the northeast corner of the first floor. The City seal is cast in stone over the main entry doors on the north façade. While buff brick is the dominant material on the second and third stories, six limestone columns are found on the north and east elevations. The south and west elevations use brick pilasters to separate the bays. A terra cotta entablature, complete with a frieze that reads “CITY HALL” and an urn-shaped balustrade, tops the third story.

The brick-clad shaft contains the fourth through eighth stories of City Hall. It is set in from the three-story base and consists of three bays on all façades. Aluminum windows are set in between the buff brick pilasters at each bay. The fourth story is demarcated by arched bays with terra cotta keystones topped by a terra cotta band. Four cast heads of Seminole women cap the brick pilasters on each façade at the eighth floor. A terra cotta cornice and balustrade tops the building’s shaft.
The ninth floor is further set in and features one arched window on each elevation, surrounded by stuccoed gypsum block. A stucco parapet rises above a terra cotta band with terra cotta urns and flames at each of the four corners. The clock tower sits in the midst of these urns, with the four faces of Hortense above the metal louvers that screen her bell in between the stuccoed gypsum pilasters. The bell is stamped “MCSHANE BELL FOUNDRY CO. BALTIMORE, MD. 1914.” The copper dome and 27-foot flagpole complete the building.

The building’s interior features a central core of staircases, restrooms, and elevators, surrounded by office space. The major interior spaces, such as the third-story City Council chambers and Council members’ offices, are separated by large operable doors with overhead transoms that provide air flow. The primary staircase features marble treads and wainscoting with a wrought iron rail.

Early alterations to City Hall included the addition of an elevator in 1927, which originally accessed only the first three stories. The single original elevator eventually was replaced by two elevators, one of which reached all eight stories of the office tower. A new driveway under the skywalk was added in 1941.

In 1961, the Tampa Police Department moved from 300 N. Florida Avenue into a new two-story complex at Tampa Street and Henderson Avenue, where Stetson College of Law is now located. The police department had outgrown the three-story headquarters building at the corner of Jackson Street and Florida Avenue, and the building’s structural system was beginning to fail. That building was demolished in 1962. The Tampa Municipal Office building, an eight-story municipal office annex, was constructed in 1978 adjacent to the historic building. In 1997 the Tampa Police Department moved again to 411 N. Franklin Street.
The 1982 renovations by Rowe Architects were sensitive to the historic nature of the building, removing non-original elements, such as the 1962 fire escape and Bahama shutters, and restoring the wood sash windows to their original color. Other interior details were restored or properly replaced.

The elevators were replaced with modern units in 2010. In 2012, deteriorating windows were replaced and the eighth-story roof and copper dome were repaired. Continuing maintenance and repairs are being undertaken on the exterior brickwork, decorative terra cotta elements, including the cornices and the balustrade, the granite columns and lintels, the third-story roof, and the mechanical systems.

Based on its architectural significance and contribution to the early development of the city, Tampa's City Hall was listed in the National Register of Historic Places in 1974, and the building was designated as a local historic landmark by Tampa City Council in 1994. It stands today as it did in 1915, as a source of inspiration that links Tampa's vibrant past to the bright prospects of its future.

TAMPA'S CITY HALL WILL BE LIGHTED UP SATURDAY

The new $235,000 City Hall just completed, will be illuminated from basement to dome for the first time next Saturday night. Lights will flash from every window in the building, and the face of Hortense, the big clock, will light up for the first time.

Special music will be played by Heidt's Municipal Band for the occasion. Prof. Cobb, leader of the band, has composed a special piece, the "City Hall March," which will be played. The march will begin from the band stand, and as the musicians reach the City Hall the lights will be flashed up. Mayor McKay probably will be delegated to turn the switch. The band will then return to the band stand and give the remainder of its concert.

The electrical wiring of the new City Hall is virtually complete. Within the next several days every connection will have been made.—Tampa Tribune.

A notice about the ceremony to celebrate the finished construction of City Hall ran in the Evening Independent on August 28, 1915.
As you open this extraordinary book, you will soon realize you have never had a history of Tampa presented in such a format and detailed manner. As you read these pages, you will be introduced to the 320 City Council members - men and women – that have served and led this community from January of 1849 to July of 2015. You will note that there were 306 men (of many nationalities, races, religions and ethnicities) and 14 women in contemporary times. You will see that we had three black councilmen (Cyrus Charles, Henry Brumick and Joseph A. Walker) up to the end of the 19th century – but segregation, gerrymandering and Jim Crow laws excluded black elected officials until 1983. Then social changes came and in the last thirty years we have had eight African American men and women on our City Council (Perry Curtis Harvey, Jr., Les and Gwen Miller, Betty P. Wiggins, Kevin White, Frank Reddick, Curtis Stokes and Rev. Tom Scott). Some of them have catapulted to the Florida Legislature and Hillsborough County Commission. Then, you will enjoy brief biographies about our city council members. The companion booklet, The Mayors of Tampa 1856-2015, highlights the 58 mayors who served since 1856. You will be traveling through the political development of what is today a vibrant and expanding major metropolitan area of our nation.

From the earliest humble beginnings, our frontier pioneers struggled to form a municipality through a basic governmental village-town structure. This was done without public funds and a very small population of 885 residents in 1860, with no industry other than farming, fishing, cattle and some shipping. Space was shared with a small U.S. Army fort that gave some degree of shelter during battles with the Seminoles. This was followed by U.S. Navy attacks during the War Between the States (1861-65). This was a period when the local citizens voted to have “no government” in a Tampa that only had about 720 residents in 1880.

As you read this book, you will become familiar with the leaders with vision, who came together like a chamber of commerce, just at a time when a Connecticut yankee named Henry B. Plant arrived with his railroad and steamships to Tampa Town. He built hotels and started a ferry service to Key West, which was Florida’s largest city at that time. Cigar manufacturers followed Vicente Martinez Ybor and Ignacio Haya, transferring their cigar factories here and telling Gavino Gutierrez, a civil engineer friend of theirs, to layout and build them a company town. You will then be introduced to the leaders in 1887 when the Florida Legislature created “the City of Tampa” and the dawn of transformation started to happen. By 1890, our population had skyrocketed to 5,500 people from all over, speaking many languages especially English and Spanish. In the meantime, other independent municipalities were being created in our large Hillsborough County by the Florida Legislature – the Cities of Plant City, Port Tampa, West Tampa, Tarpon Springs, Clearwater, St. Petersburg, Dunedin, Largo, Gulfport and Temple Terrace. They elected their own mayors and City Council.

The presence of European immigrants was not limited to Tampa. The City of Tarpon Springs became known as the largest Greek community in Florida. The Orange Belt Railroad owned by Russian Peter Demens had reached Tarpon Springs before it reached St. Petersburg the following year, 1888. The city of St. Petersburg got its name from Demens’ hometown in Russia. The City of St. Petersburg was incorporated in 1892. Keep in mind that Pinellas County did not exist until January 1912. All of that land was recognized as the western part of Hillsborough County. So the cities of Clearwater incorporated in 1891, Dunedin incorporated in 1899, Largo incorporated in 1905, and Gulfport incorporated in 1910; all were part of the very large Hillsborough County, also called the Sixth (6) Judicial Circuit of Florida. That designation followed the Pinellas-Pasco circuit in 1912 when west Hillsborough became Pinellas (named from early Spanish maps that called that part of the peninsula Punta Pinal, meaning Point of Pines) and the now smaller Hillsborough County became also known as the 13th Judicial Circuit of Florida. Our streets in Tampa’s Palma Ceia area have Spanish names just like the street names in old Havana, Cuba.

Our own Henry B. Plant did not just build the beautiful and exotic Tampa Bay Hotel (now the University of Tampa); he also built the hotel on stilts in Port Tampa and in 1897 opened the beautiful Belleview Biltmore Hotel in Clearwater. When Henry died, his son Morton F. Plant gave a large sum of money from his father’s estate to open a hospital in Clearwater that carries Plant’s son’s name. All of this happened before Pinellas County was born.
By 1900, Tampa had multiplied in population to 15,000. Tampa adapted to the immigrants and the immigrants successfully adapted to Tampa. Our port became the Ellis Island of Florida. The residents of Tampa were industrious and hard working. They helped each other and many maintained the work ethic, customs and traditions of the old country. Some were leaders, most were followers, but they were all community minded and became civically involved. Some of them ran for office and were elected. Others saw their children elected to office or working for city government in jobs that kept the city machinery operating. We were a “paella” of Christians, Jews, Catholics, Protestants, immigrants, transients, foreigners, natives, whites, blacks, newcomers, old timers, young, old, wealthy, poor – you name it, we had it in Tampa. The interethnic relation, among the new and old, was best found in the 200 cigar factories and the multiethnic communities and mutual aid societies found in Tampa. Assimilation and acculturation may have been slow at first, but their younger generation adapted quickly. They studied and learned English and American government and history. The Tampa foreigners soon became proud naturalized American citizens.

As you will see from the biographies presented, the elected officials over these 166 years reflected all varieties of backgrounds from farmers, cattlemen, carpenters, boat captains, land developers, ferrymen, physicians, lawyers, custom collectors, pharmacists, printers, engineers, dentists, laborers, postmen, immigrants, native born citizens, cigar manufacturers, cigar makers, cigar box workers, lectores (readers) in cigar factories, and many other occupations and vocations. Some of the elected officials came from or went on to serve on the Florida Supreme Court, and as Governors, Senators, and Representatives, Clerks of the Court and City Clerks – career public servants, while others moved away or just faded away from public view. As the population grew and new suburbs blossomed, the city fathers and their engineering staffs built more roads and bridges across the Hillsborough River to accommodate the citizenry.

Consider some of these success stories and historic events happening right here in Tampa. The cigar industry became our economic engine. During our cigar industry boom – in just one year alone in 1929, Tampa cigar factories produced 504,753,000 cigars – that is almost one and a half million cigars per day, Saturdays, Sundays and holidays included. As you flip through these pages and see faces on old photographs that our researchers were able to find, consider that our lumbering, ship building and ship repairs were making us also famous. During our ship building boom, the largest ship ever built south of Virginia was launched here in Tampa harbor in 1919. We also had tragedies. During the First World War, our own USS Tampa was sunk in the English Channel, close to England, on September 27, 1918, killing all – many from Tampa. The American Legion Post and cemetery on Kennedy Boulevard just west of Dale Mabry Highway, remembers our heroes on the USS Tampa. Our port facilities were constantly being improved. Bigger and heavier vessels could come and go through Tampa Bay with more ports and harbors. That is because our leaders were focused on numerous dredging and deepening channels of our port area in 1900, 1905, 1910, 1912, 1917, 1924, et cetera. The best example of these efforts was the phosphate boom. Consider that in 1938, 1,722,075 tons of phosphate were shipped from Tampa (remember every ton weighs 2,000 pounds).

With this publication, you will be able to answer who was at the helm of our municipal ship of state during the major events like fires, yellow fever epidemics, riots, civil demonstrations and disturbances, racial confrontations, sixty years of separate but equal segregation, gradual integration once the courts ruled separate but equal is not equal. Who were the short term leaders? Who led us to become a major seaport and cruise ship center and an international airport? From these pages, you will appreciate how our city leaders, administrators and staff saw the arrival of new immigrants with and without papers, welcoming the new Tampa citizens from many countries all over the world. For the new arrivals, Tampa offers new frontiers for them to embrace “the American dream.” As immigrants, they appreciate the freedoms and liberties of this “new land.” As those before them, they were grateful and never stopped “paying back.” Tampa’s future is very bright because of its diversity. Tampa’s past is prologue to a glorious future.

An incredible amount of meticulous research is now available to our citizenry. Reading through these pages, you will understand and appreciate those who helped lead Tampa through good and rough periods, and also how they handled the countless deaths in office, suspensions and resignations, freezes, epidemics and diseases that threatened the health of the citizenry, as well as flooding and other natural and human catastrophes. You will also see how our city government functioned and continues to function well because of the elected office holders and the array of dedicated staff of public servants who have kept the machinery of city government working.

Having served in the front lines of government for the last 50 plus years here in Tampa, Hillsborough County, Florida, I take this opportunity to publicly commend all of our public employees, staffs and administrators – at every level of government – for their hard work, loyalty and dedication to this great city, county, state and nation which is the envy of the world and the paradise that it has become. I especially applaud City Clerk Shirley Foxx-Knowles and her predecessor Frances Henriquez, as well as Archives and Records Manager Jennifer Dietz and her predecessor Claire Cardina for their leadership in preserving our municipal records and archives that have made these valuable publications possible. Enjoy!
Tampa’s legislative branch of government, known today as the City Council and in early periods as the City Commission or Board of Representatives, has been a vital arm of city government. Even today, under Tampa’s strong mayor form of government, the City Council makes important decisions on a wide variety of key issues, including zoning and infrastructure. Not only does the council perform its policymaking role, it also represents the citizens of Tampa. Over time, the council has progressed to truly representing the diverse neighborhoods and population of Tampa.

During the mid and late 1880s, both before and after the cigar industry located in Ybor City, the council primarily was representative of Tampa’s business elite who in 1885 organized the Board of Trade, the predecessor to the Chamber of Commerce. For example, the nine-member council elected in 1885 included seven founders of the Board of Trade and seven members of the 1895 eleven-man council belonged to the Board of Trade. During the 1890s, however, and into the first decade of the 20th century, political organizations formed that included working class representatives and sometimes had success in gaining seats on the City Council. During most of the 1920s the citywide (at large) elections adopted along with the Commission-Manager form of government resulted in the commission being comprised primarily of members of the business elite who lived in Hyde Park and Tampa Heights. However, the return in 1928 of Mayor-Council government with district elections brought more widespread representation, including Latins representing Ybor City, West Tampa and Palmetto Beach. Even after citywide elections were again adopted in 1945, Latins continued to have broad representation.

Tampa’s African American population, however, remained outside of the system of representation. After Reconstruction, the only African American elected to council was Joseph A. Walker, who was elected for a one-year term in 1887. The reorganization of the Democratic Party in Tampa to the White Municipal Party before the 1910 elections ensured that no blacks would gain representation. The party adopted the “white primary” that excluded blacks from voting in its primary elections, whose victors almost always won in the general elections. This system continued until white primaries were overturned by the U.S. Supreme Court in the 1944 Smith v. Allwright decision. Although it could no longer forbid blacks from voting in its primaries, the White Municipal Party continued as a legal entity until the Hillsborough County legislative delegation sponsored a bill in 1953 that adopted nonpartisan elections for Tampa. Not until 1983 was another African American, Perry Curtis Harvey, Jr., elected to the Tampa City Council. All of the councils elected since then have included African Americans.

Women also were outside the system of electoral representation for most of Tampa’s history. Although women gained the franchise in 1920 and could after that date legally vote and run for office in the white primaries, no women served on the City Council until Catherine Barja was elected in 1971. Two others, Jan Platt and Sandy Freedman, were elected in 1974. Eleven more women have been elected since then.

Tampa’s system of electoral representation for City Council, which, since the 1987 election, includes four district seats and three citywide seats, has evolved to allow the diversity of population and perspectives in the community to be represented to a greater extent than ever before. Anyone interested in exploring this evolution, along with a myriad of other aspects of the council, can do no better than examine The City Council of Tampa and Celebration of Old City Hall’s Centennial. It is an outstanding study of not just changes in an institution of city government but also, in several ways, of changes in the community.
First elected in 1974, Charlie Miranda is not only one of two of the longest serving City Council members in the City's history he is also one of the most colorful. Known for his campaign slogan “Who Cares? Miranda Cares!”, fiscal responsibility, and razor sharp memory we asked Charlie to share some of the changes he remembers or has been a part of when it comes to the City of Tampa.

You can always be certain about one thing, okay maybe more than one thing, but for the purpose of this intro and the City of Tampa, it’s that “change” is inevitable. I am proud to be a part of this book and take many of you down memory lane and some of you down “I didn't know that” lane.

Let me start off by talking about our government structure. When I was first elected into office in 1974, all seven district City Council seats were At-Large, meaning every seat represented the entire city. It wasn’t until 1987 with city growth that we went from seven At-Large District seats to three At-Large District seats and four Single-Member District seats. As a result of that change, I am one of the few council members who have represented all citizens of Tampa by being elected to two different At-Large seats and two out of the four Single-Member seats. Today in 2015, we are adding to the history books. It’s the first time that four of our City Council members have all resided in District 6. Also for the first time, all current At-Large members are Latin.
In addition to structure changes, we also have had election-day changes. Today everyone wonders why City Council members, and the Mayor, are all elected at the same time. There was no staggering of election seats due to the cost of an election. In fact, City Council elections were held during the General Elections. Those elections used to be in September 1971-75 then changed to October 1975-79, and finally moved to March in 1983, where it still stands today. Voter turnout in the early days could reach as high as 40%. Today we’re lucky to reach a 15-20% voter turnout.

In the early 1970s I decided that people should have the right to seek office without paying filing fees. I thought it shouldn't be about raising money, but rather the person's desire to serve. So I filed a lawsuit that would permit candidates to file by obtaining a certain number of petitions. The case won here in Federal Court, but the State took it to the Circuit Court of Appeal and then on to the U.S. Supreme Court and in 1974, the U.S. Supreme Court agreed that people should be able to seek office utilizing the petition method. Since then, many candidates have qualified using the petition method rather than paying a filing fee.

Once elected, council members didn't have a fancy office to serve its constituents; in fact, council members shared a big office area on the 3rd Floor of old City Hall with a cubbyhole for our messages and one phone for everyone to share. (Now we have government in the Sunshine laws). In fact, because we didn’t have offices, constituents would at times meet you at your home. The office was staffed by four people who supported all of our efforts. The office manager was Beverly Spicola, assisted by Hazel Pines (who later became office manager), Joann Pennington and the receptionist Christy. Our agenda was printed on a mimeograph machine. No fancy copiers back then.

The Mayor's office and staff was also located on the 3rd floor of old City Hall along with the Office of City Clerk. In 1978, Mayor William Poe built a new City Hall, now called the Tampa Municipal Office Building, and moved the Mayor’s office and staff to the eighth floor. I'll never forget, one day Mayor Poe called me in to his office and sat me down. He said “Charlie, you’re too darn smart to be dumb. You need to finish your education. I want you to go over to the University of Tampa and sign up!” Thanks to the mentoring of this fine Mayor, I did what he said, and the rest is history. In the meantime, while the Mayor and his staff were moving out, City Council members were moving in to their new space with an office for each council member. However, it wasn’t until the mid-80s that City Council aides became part of the picture. In 1999, Mayor Greco moved the mayor’s office and staff from the eighth floor to the first floor to be more accessible to the people.

In 1971 before I became a council member Catherine Barja was the first woman elected to the City Council. In 1974, Tampa voted in two more women to City Council seats. I had the pleasure of serving with these two women who went on to do bigger and better things than me. Jan Platt became a County Commissioner and Sandy Freedman became Mayor of the City of Tampa.

For many years, if you ever visited old City Hall and needed to take the elevator to a floor higher than the third floor chances were you would be greeted and driven by Hortensia Sotomayor, the elevator operator. Upon Hortensia’s retirement in 2007 the position of elevator operator was retired and an automated elevator came to old City Hall.

I remember when City Council meetings didn’t require security personnel. However, when the world changed on September 11, 2001, security measures ramped up, and officers became a part of our process – waving a wand around people before they can enter the council meetings and, on a rare occasion, escorting out a malcontent.

As our government structure was changing to accommodate growth, so were government operations. In 1974, our budget was around $300 million dollars. Today, our city budget is almost $900 million dollars. Throughout the years, city utility bills were mailed on postcards then changed to a single page and today you can pay your bill on line…paperless. In the postcard days, you would tear off the perforated tab and mail that in with your payment or, bring it in person to pay. On the back of the water bill postcard it was blank. I initiated the printing of city contact information on the back of the post card as well as other pertinent public notices that provided good customer service and took advantage of this post card that we were already paying to print and mail. City services have changed too. The days of the garbage truck with four employees who lifted the trashcan that you were required to buy, and dumped your garbage in the truck compactor has been replaced by one driver and an automated garbage truck that with a push of the button does it all.

When it comes to City Council meetings, televised meetings didn’t occur until the end of 1984 but the meeting was taped for showing at a later date. In December, 1986 council meetings went live through city’s government access channel.

Sometimes change means “what goes around comes around” – downtown streets have had their share of changes. Two-way streets were turned in to one-way streets and during the Iorio administration, we realized that this change impacted businesses and didn’t make it easy for people to park, so we changed one-way streets back to two-way with the exception of a few.

Another thing that has changed throughout the years is the political process of running for office. As someone who grew up living in the Tampa Public Housing, which by the way is now referred to as Affordable Housing, I didn’t know how bad I had it. In fact, I thought I lived in a condominium. We had stairs, solar heating, and hot water. I never once thought I couldn’t achieve what I set my mind to. And I never thought I wasn’t good enough to run for office.

You see, the entire process was so different back then – it was more personal. There were 12,000 people in the cigar industry and really several big companies that employed most of the people: Continental Can, American Can, Reynolds Can, Schlitz, and Budweiser. You had the ability to go to those places at every shift change and shake everyone's hand and strike up a conversation. You could touch 20,000 people relatively fast over and over. We also had the ability to visit stores and talk with people in the stores. We could also use a megaphone in an open car with speakers and ride through neighborhoods reminding people to vote, telling them who to vote for, and other messages. We visited fire stations and we were able to talk to each shift; we held more fish fries and spaghetti dinners to meet more people face-to-face.

Population growth and technology influenced a lot of change in the political process. A City Council race back then cost about $5,000 to $7,000 dollars and there were no campaign managers or consultants with a population of about 200,000. Today, a City Council race will cost around $100,000 dollars and up with a population of about 350,000. Technology makes it easy for candidates to pinpoint where they need to spend their time and money without the need to be so visible.

There was a time you had to go to the polls if you wanted to vote. Voting day was just one day. Today voters have several options, you can go to the polls, mail-in your ballot, and even vote early to give the voters more opportunity to vote.

And, the way the media covered elections was much different. Beat reporters would get to know you, were more hands on talking to people, researching, and really learning the facts. Today, they let their fingers do the walking on the keyboard to research facts. Social media has driven news reporting to be more instantaneous and spontaneous.

I could go on and on about what’s changed and what hasn’t. What I do know is that I feel very fortunate and honored to have been a part of it all!

Just for the record, there are some things that haven't changed: a lot of effort by a lot of people throughout the years to keep our city moving forward and making our community a better place to live, work, play, and learn. And then there's me – Charlie Miranda. For the past 40 years, Charlie Miranda has cared and still does!
Women of Council

A total of 325 people have served on Tampa’s City Council: 311 men and 14 women.

Two hundred and eighty men served on Tampa’s City Council before Catherine Barja was elected in 1971.

Since Catherine Barja’s election, thirteen more women have served: Sandra Warshaw Freedman, who went on to become the first woman elected as Mayor of Tampa; Jan Kaminis Platt and Haven Wilson Poe, who both went on to serve on the Hillsborough County Commission; Helen Chavez; Linda Saul-Sena, the longest serving woman on the City Council; Gwen Miller, the first black woman elected to the council; Betty P. Wiggins; Fran Davin, who was the second woman ever elected to the Hillsborough County Commission; Rose V. Ferlita, who later served on the Hillsborough County Commission; Mary C. Alvarez, Mary Mulhern, and current council members Yvonne “Yolie” Capin and Lisa J. Montelione.

First Woman Elected to the Tampa City Council

“When I was first elected they were just looking for a woman to make a big mistake. And guess what? It didn’t happen! They were all very cautious around me for a few months. After that I was just another member of council.”
Sandra Warshaw Freedman, 1974-1986
First Woman to Serve as Council Chair
First Woman to Serve as Mayor of Tampa

“At that point there was a feeling from some people that you can’t have a woman do anything except stay home and mind the house. But I think there was a real desire for change and that there was a new wind afoot that woman could do that job and might do it better or differently than men.”

Longest Serving Woman on the City Council

“For my first eight years on City Council I was the only woman working with six men who didn’t share many of my concerns: protecting the environment, historic preservation, arts and culture, and urban design. It was pretty challenging. Plus I was the first and only Council member to become pregnant and have two babies while serving!”

Gwen Miller, 1995-2011
First Black Woman to Serve on the City Council

“It’s better now than it was when I ran. There weren’t a lot of women in politics because women were helping their husbands and other people run and get into office. We realized that if we can get them into office then we can put ourselves in office.”

Tampa City Council History

Tampa has evolved over time from a village to a town to a city and Tampa’s City Council has also gone through many changes. The term “City Council” was chosen because it is the current title of the legislative body of the city although this body has held different designations during its existence such as Board of Trustees, Board of Representatives, City Aldermen, etc.

In 1849, The Village of Tampa was incorporated and voters elected a Board of Trustees. This village form of government continued sporadically until the City Council was officially established in 1855. The City Council was created in the City Charter granted by a Special Act of the Florida State Legislature signed by Governor James E. Broome on December 15, 1855.

Florida seceded from the Union on January 11, 1861. In February of 1862, Confederate military authorities suspended the City’s government. The municipal government was not officially reorganized until October 25, 1866. No more municipal elections were known to have been held in Tampa again until March 1, 1869.

At the March 1, 1869 municipal election the citizens of Tampa voted for the No Corporation People’s Ticket to dissolve the City government. This ended Tampa’s original City Charter as well as municipal government in Tampa for the next four years. Though council members were elected during this time they kept their promise to not meet and therefore ended City government in Tampa. The municipal government was not officially reorganized until August 11, 1873 when it was called the Town of Tampa.

Though a council was elected from 1873-1874, it appears that elections were suspended until 1876. While council members served during that time, records indicate that they were appointed directly by the mayor. Subsequently, there is no information on anyone who served from August of 1874 until August of 1876 other than Thomas Edward Jackson, who is noted as Council President in the minute books from those years.

In 1881, the Florida State Legislature passed an act making council member terms two years in duration and requiring the council to divide its membership into two nearly equal parts to be elected subsequently in alternating elections. The council elected in the 1881 election drew lots to determine which members would serve two-year terms. On July 1, 1885, an ordinance was passed that changed the number of council seats from five to nine. Two of the four new members were to serve two year terms and two were to serve one year terms. The four new members drew lots at the first meeting of the new council to decide who would serve the different terms.
On July 15, 1887, Tampa reorganized under a Special Act of the Florida State Legislature that abolished the government of the Town of Tampa and established the charter for the City of Tampa.

One of the first acts of the new city government was the establishment of four wards. Two City Council members were elected from each ward and three were elected at-large, for a total of eleven council members. This practice continued for the next twenty years. In 1908, eleven council members were still elected but due to the growing population the total number of wards increased to nine, with one member being elected per ward and two members being elected at-large. In 1914 the number of wards expanded again to ten, with one member being elected per ward and one member being elected at-large, which kept the total number of council members at eleven.

On January 4, 1921, the Commission-Manager form of government took effect, having been approved by citizens in the October 1920 election. In this form of government, a Mayor Commissioner and four Commissioners were elected on a citywide basis with all five members having the same administrative power. This lasted until 1928, when Tampa changed back to the old form of government with a Mayor and twelve members of the Board of Representatives, each member elected from a district. These representatives were also referred to as aldermen. In 1945, the number of representatives was changed to seven, elected on a citywide basis. This revision also changed the title of the head of the Board of Representatives from “President” to “Chairman.” This title has been used ever since.

In 1947, the terms were lengthened from two year terms to four year terms. Due to the annexation of Sulphur Springs, Rocky Point, and the surrounding areas on April 28, 1953, four new districts were added to the Board of Representatives. A special election was held on June 16, 1953, to fill these seats. In 1955 new districts were drawn reducing the number of seats once again to seven.

The Board of Representatives name was changed back to the City Council in 1959, and in 1963, the City Council members were once again elected by district, with representatives from seven districts. In 1987, this was changed to a system in which four council members are elected, one from each district, and three others are elected at-large. This system continues today.

The following chronology and biographical section was compiled to provide the most complete history of Tampa's City Council members as possible. Certain council members had more historical documentation than others and in some cases biographies have been supplemented with historical facts from the time period in which the council member served.

District 3 Joe Chillura

Notes: The initial election in September of 1971, resulted in a run off for the District 2 seat between Sam Mirabella and Joe Kotvas. The run–off election was held on 9/28/1971. This run–off election was challenged and eventually declared invalid. A final run–off for the seat was held on 11/2/1971, resulting in the election of Joe Kotvas. Mr. Kotvas took his seat at the 11/9/1971 council meeting

Mayor Dick Greco resigned from office on 1/1/1974. Council Chairman Richard L. Cheney was sworn in as mayor according to the existing rules of succession until a special election to fill the vacancy could be held. Mr. Cheney subsequently announced his candidacy for the office of mayor, as did council members Joe Kotvas and Vincent Meloy. On 6/20/1974, Mr. Cheney died while in office. Lloyd Copeland, Council Vice Chairman, was immediately sworn in as Mayor of Tampa under the rules of succession. During their meeting held on June 20, 1974, the City Council elected Lee Duncan Acting Chairman and Catherine Barja Acting Chairman Pro–tempore. (Source: Council Minute Book

A Florida native, Jesse Carter resided where the University of Tampa is now located. He served as a State Militia Colonel and also worked as a stagecoach line operator who was contracted to bring mail from St. Augustine. He served repeatedly in the legislature in Alachua County. He was one of the founders of the Masonic Lodge in Tampa and also operated a boarding house. He was an advocate for transportation and supported an initiative to build a railroad. Carter served as a ferryman for ferry service across the Hillsborough River. He worked to establish schools in Tampa, and had a key role in the construction of Tampa’s first school building in 1858. This building still stands on the University of Tampa campus.

Born in Philadelphia on December 12, 1812, Thomas Pugh Kennedy moved to St. Augustine in 1828. He came to Fort Brooke in December of 1840 as a deputy U.S. Marshal. In 1843, he established a store at Tampa and Whiting Streets and traded with the Seminoles. At the end of the First Seminole War, he purchased a schooner and engaged in trade with Central and South America. He was elected as the first Hillsborough County Treasurer in 1845 and took office in January of 1846. In 1848, he opened the Kennedy & Darling General Store, once the largest such store in South Florida, with future council member John Darling. He died in 1858.
During this time period the City Council was referred to as the Board of Trustees. When Culbreath A. Ramsey was elected to the Board of Trustees in 1849, he was a newcomer to politics. Born in Georgia, the 1850 Hillsborough County Census lists his occupation as a farmer. Farming was a popular occupation in Tampa during this time and many settlers had small farms.

Originally from Maryland, William Ross was 27 years old when he was elected to the Board of Trustees in 1849. Ross worked in Tampa as a carpenter. At this time in Tampa's history, many new buildings were being constructed both in the Village of Tampa and at Fort Brooke, a military post located at the mouth of the Hillsborough River. In 1849, Tampa was still in the midst of rebuilding from a hurricane that had struck in September of 1848.
M.G. Sikes came to Tampa from Savannah, Georgia. He was a stonemason by trade, popular in the community and was elected to serve as the President of the Board of Trustees. In 1849 the population of the Village of Tampa was approximately 185 people, which did not include the military personnel at Fort Brooke. A central market was very much needed and one of the first acts taken by the newly elected Board of Trustees was to construct a public market in the middle of Water Street, just south of Lafayette.

When not serving as President of the Board of Trustees, Alfred C. Robinson worked as a farmer. At the time of his election in October of 1850, Tampa was going through a tumultuous time of growth and expansion. The census showed that there were 441 citizens and 79 homes. Oaklawn Cemetery was established as Tampa’s first official cemetery. Unfortunately, very little is known about the trustees who served during this time and the other trustees who served with Robinson from October 1850 – October 1851 were not documented.
MARTIN CUNNINGHAM
President, October 1851 – October 1852

Martin Cunningham served as Hillsborough County’s Clerk of Court. He was one of the founders, along with former fellow trustee Jesse Carter and several others, of a Masonic Lodge on March 12, 1850. This lodge would later become known as Hillsborough Lodge No. 25 F&AM. Though it was noted that Cunningham was President of the Board of Trustees, the other trustees who served with him during this time period were not documented. On October 10, 1852, officials learned they had no legal authority to levy taxes and electors voted to abolish the village government.

JOHN DARLING
President, September 1853 – September 1854
November 16, 1858 – February 12, 1859

The Board of Trustees was reestablished on September 10, 1853, after a special meeting and a vote was called. John Darling was elected to serve as President of the Board of Trustees. Born in Vermont, Darling came to Fort Brooke in 1836, and served in the Second Seminole War. He established a general store with former trustee Thomas Pugh Kennedy at Tampa and Whiting Streets, as well as a saw mill in the area that would later become known as Waterworks Park. The other trustees who served with Darling during this time were not documented, nor were any trustees from 1854-1855. John Darling would later go on to serve as a member of the City Council from 1858-1859, as City Clerk from 1859-1861, and as a member of the Hillsborough County Commission in 1865.
On September 15, 1855, Tampanians voted to dissolve the Town of Tampa and to establish a City Charter. The City Council of the City of Tampa was created in the City Charter granted by a Special Act of the Florida State Legislature signed by Governor James E. Broome on December 15, 1855. Elections were held in February of 1856 and Dr. Darwin Austen Branch was elected to serve as the first President of City Council under the new City Charter. Born on November 28, 1832 in Vermont, Branch worked as a physician and was just twenty-four years old when he was elected. He was one of the founding members of the Tampa branch of the Order of Odd Fellows and he served as Secretary for the Florida Know-Nothing Party. When Mayor Joseph Lancaster died in office on November 25, 1856, Dr. Branch served as Acting Mayor for about two weeks until the City Council appointed J. Alfonso DeLaunay. Dr. Branch would later go on to serve as Mayor of Tampa from February 9, 1857 until February 10, 1858. Tragically, his life was cut short by the yellow fever epidemic that struck Tampa later that year. He died at the age of twenty-six on August 16, 1858.

Born in New Hampshire, Micajah C. Brown moved to Tampa in 1845, and ran a small clothing store with his brother at the corner of Washington and Franklin. He was elected to Hillsborough County’s first Board of County Commissioners in 1845, and took office in January 1846. During his time as a County Commissioner he wrote to Congress asking for a land grant for a new courthouse as well as 160
Originally from Virginia, the 1850 census lists Christopher Q. Crawford’s profession as a miller. Like other City Council members at the time, he was a member of the Order of Odd Fellows as well as the Know-Nothing party. He took part in early efforts to bring the railroad to Tampa and along with John Darling, he chaired two meetings on this topic at the courthouse in 1853. Though it would take many years to come to fruition, his efforts helped build momentum and public support for the creation of a rail line in Tampa.

Benjamin J. Hagler is perhaps best known for his position as a ferryman, conducting a ferry service across the Hillsborough River from downtown Tampa to the west bank near present-day Hyde Park. He was appointed by the Hillsborough County Commission to perform this important duty in 1848. Like other City Council members from this time period, Hagler owned a substantial amount of land. His parcel was located east of Fort Brooke in what is now Ybor City.
Born in Cornwall-on-Hudson, New York, Edward A. Clarke came to Tampa in 1853. He opened a general store, E.A. Clarke and Company, also known as the “Blue Store” on the corner of Marion and Washington. He was the brother-in-law of fellow council member Dr. Darwin Austen Branch, having married Darwin’s sister Helen in 1855. He was a Master Mason of the Hillsborough Lodge and an active member of the Know-Nothing party. Clarke was elected Mayor of Tampa and he served from October 23, 1866 until December of 1866. In 1871, Clarke was one of the founders of the Episcopal Parish of St. Andrew’s Episcopal Church. He was also one of the three first superintendents of two public schools established in 1872. Clarke supported transportation projects, participating in an effort to convince the Florida Legislature to pass a railroad bill calling for a railway that would reach Tampa and eventually Key West. An investor in real estate, he acquired 33 acres north of Harrison Street in 1875 for $255, subdivided it, and incorporated it as North Tampa, which was later annexed into Tampa in 1887. Clarke was one of the original members of the Board of Trade in 1885. He served a total of five terms as a council member. He died in November of 1886.

Originally from Maryland, William Cooley arrived in East Florida in 1813 during a joint military campaign of Tennessee and Georgia forces. He lived along the St. Mary’s River until 1823 and then resided in the New River settlement in South Florida from 1823 to 1836, where he had a successful enterprise in arrowroot.
After an attack on his house by Creek Indians in which his wife and infant son were killed, he moved briefly to Indian Key in 1836 and then to Tampa in 1837. Cooley was made an express rider by General Thomas Jessup of Fort Dade to deliver messages from Tampa to Fort Heilman, a route which spanned 170 miles. He became Homosassa’s first postmaster in 1845 before returning to Tampa in 1847 and acquiring several properties. In addition to the three terms he served on the City Council, Cooley became Tampa’s Port Warden and also owned a store. He died in Hillsborough County in 1863.

John Jackson was born in Ballybay in Monaghan County, Ireland. He came to America in 1841, first to New Orleans, where he was an assistant city engineer, then to Hillsborough County in July of 1843. Jackson homesteaded near present-day Palmetto, and built a house that was destroyed by the Hurricane of 1848. He was given a position as a federal surveyor and made significant contributions to the surveying of Tampa, creating some of its earliest street maps that are still used in historical research today. In 1849, he opened a general store at the northwest corner of Washington and Tampa Streets. He became Acting Mayor of Tampa on May 20, 1861, when Mayor Hamlin Snell resigned. In February of 1862, he was formally elected as Mayor of Tampa but served just 19 days as all of Tampa’s government officials were dismissed on February 22, 1862, by the Confederate Commander at Fort Brooke. The municipal government was not officially reorganized until October 25, 1866. John Jackson went on to continue his successful career as a surveyor. His son, Thomas Edward Jackson, would later follow in his footsteps, serving both on the City Council and two terms as the Mayor of Tampa.
Born in Germany, Christopher L. Friebele lived in Savannah before coming to Tampa in 1848. He acquired a large amount of land in Tampa Heights along the Hillsborough River and operated a store on the northeast corner of Franklin and Washington. In 1860, Friebele married Julia Wall and became the brother-in-law of Edward A. Clarke, whose second wife was Sarah Wall. Both Friebele and Clarke were merchants who not only served on the City Council but also participated in blockade running to acquire supplies during the Civil War. They were both captured at Anclote Key and imprisoned at Ship Island Mississippi in 1864, where they stayed for the remainder of the war. Like other council members before him, Friebele favored the railroad coming to Tampa and he was supportive of this cause. He died in December of 1886.

John T. Givens was born in South Carolina and served as a soldier in the army from 1835-1842, spending six months stationed at Fort Brooke. He moved to Madison County, Florida in 1843 and then to Tampa in 1848, building a house at Morgan and Lafayette. He established a Methodist church across the street from his home. Like several other council members, he favored the Know-Nothing party. In addition to serving on the City Council, Givens also served as a Hillsborough County Commissioner for two terms. He worked as both a builder and an undertaker, specializing in making coffins. The Hillsborough County Commission hired Givens to construct a county jail, which opened in January of 1875. Givens also took part in building Tampa’s first public school, which was formerly located on Franklin Street and was since moved to the University of Tampa campus. He named one of his sons Darwin Branch after the former councilman and mayor. He and his wife Nancy had twelve children.

WILLIAM T. BROWN

February 10, 1858 – February 12, 1859
February 3, 1861 - February 22, 1862

Born in 1810 in Marlborough County, South Carolina, William T. Brown moved to Florida in 1831. He settled first in Leon County and then Alachua County before moving to Hillsborough County in 1852, where he stayed until his death in 1868. During the Second and Third Seminole Wars, he served in volunteer companies. Brown was the owner of a general store and two plantations.

WILLIAM BRINTON HOOKER

President, February 10, 1858 – February 12, 1859

Originally from Georgia, William Brinton Hooker moved to White Springs, Florida in 1832. In Hamilton County he served as a delegate in the convention to frame a state constitution and he was one of the signers of the first Florida Constitution in 1838. Hooker moved to Hillsborough County in 1843, where he acquired vast holdings of land and cattle. He served in the Seminole Wars and was active in local politics. Tampa’s first mansion-like residence was constructed by William Brinton Hooker in 1860. The home was located at the corner of East and Madison Streets. He planted many orange trees on its grounds and after the Civil War it was converted to a hotel called the Orange Grove Hotel. During the Civil War he moved to Brooksville where he died on June 11, 1871.
A Florida native, Andrew Pacetti was born in St. Augustine and lived in Jacksonville before arriving in Tampa. Prior to serving on City Council, Andrew Pacetti was elected as Tampa’s first City Marshal on February 9, 1856. When the position was created, a formal police force did not yet exist and the City Marshal was in charge of night patrols. He served in this position for 2 years until he was elected to the City Council on February 10, 1858. Pacetti also had a real estate office located on Twiggs Street. He died at the age of 84 on August 31, 1902.

Dr. John A. Rice was elected on September 20, 1858, in a special municipal election to fill the vacancy that was created when fellow council member Simon Turman, Jr., resigned. At the time of the election, Tampa was suffering from a yellow fever epidemic. The City was under Quarantine Law and Dr. Rice had been appointed as Port Inspector. He was a member of Tampa’s Board of Health and he was trying to treat the disease when he died in office on October 6, 1858.
Born in Indiana in 1829, Simon Turman, Jr., came to Florida with his family in 1843. His father, Simon Turman, Sr., was a prominent judge who also served as a member of the Hillsborough County Board of County Commissioners. Simon Turman, Jr., had a successful career in journalism. He purchased a Tampa newspaper called The Florida Peninsular in 1855, and he also worked as the editor of the paper. He had an interest in politics but resigned from the City Council when his father fell ill and died from yellow fever in October of 1858. Shortly thereafter, he became active in the Civil War and was commissioned Lieutenant in the Confederate Army on April 10, 1862. He was soon promoted to Lieutenant Colonel and was wounded in the Battle of Resacca in Georgia. He died on May 22, 1864.

J. Alfonso DeLaunay was the son of a Revolutionary War veteran. He was born in Virginia and came to Tampa in 1848. He operated the Palmer House Hotel and served as Postmaster of Tampa from 1852-1860. Prior to the term that he served on the City Council, DeLaunay was Tampa’s Third Mayor from December 6, 1856 until February 9, 1857. During his time as Mayor of Tampa, he helped the City conform to the procedures established by the Legislative Act of December 15, 1855, which provided 160 acres of land to homesteaders. He was active politically and like former council member Simon Turman, Jr., he was an editor of The Florida Peninsular newspaper. DeLaunay would later go on to establish his own newspaper. called The Sunny South in 1860. He was a strong supporter of secession during the Civil War. He served as Confederate States Postmaster from 1860-1865 and he was a member of a volunteer militia at the start of the Civil War called The Silver Grays.

WILLIAM GOULD FERRIS, SR.

February 12, 1859 – February 1, 1860

One Tampa’s first merchants, William Gould Ferris, Sr., was born in New York in 1810 and arrived in Tampa in 1841. An army sutler, he opened a store at Fort Brooke that was destroyed by the Hurricane of 1848. He later opened stores at Washington Street and Whiting Street as well as an ice house called Tampa Ice Company. Like several other City Council members who served around this time, he was a member of the Order of Odd Fellows as well as the Know-Nothing party and he supported efforts to bring the railroad to Tampa. He served as the Chairman of the Conservative party during the Civil War and he went on to become one of the founders of the St. Andrew’s Episcopal Church in 1871. Two of his sons, Henry Clarke Ferris, and Josiah Ferris, both served as Mayor of Tampa. He died in 1895 at the age of 85.

JAMES GETTIS

February 12, 1859 – February 1, 1860

An attorney by profession, James Gettis was born in Pennsylvania in 1816. As a Democrat, he found himself in the minority in Tampa where the Know-Nothing party was the most popular party at the time. After serving on the City Council, Gettis would go on to hold the rank of Captain in Company E. of the Seventh Florida Infantry of the Confederate Army. After the war, he was elected to the Circuit Court in 1866, and tried to restore law to post-Civil War Tampa. He died on December 14, 1867.

VINCENT LEONARDI
February 1, 1860 – February 2, 1861

Vincent Leonardi was a Florida native and the grandson of Rocco Leonardi, one of the founders of New Smyrna. He was born on January 21, 1823, and worked as both a carpenter and a merchant. The Leonardi family was well known in Tampa where they owned stores and significant amounts of land. Vincent’s older brother, Bartholomew Leonardi, also served on the City Council. Vincent Leonardi died in Florida on December 15, 1890.

OSSIAN BINGLEY HART
February 1, 1860 – February 2, 1861

Born in Jacksonville in 1821, Ossian Bingley Hart was an attorney. He came to Tampa from Key West in 1857 to take over the law practice of his mentor, Joseph B. Lancaster, who had died while serving as the first Mayor of Tampa in 1856. Before he was elected to the City Council, Hart was notable in Tampa for successfully appealing the conviction of a slave who had been wrongfully convicted of murder. During the Civil War he supported the Union and opposed secession. Hart would later go on to become a Florida Supreme Court Justice, serving from 1868-1873. He then became Henry Laurens Mitchell was born in Alabama on September 3, 1831, and came to Tampa with his family when he was a teenager. His family was in the farming business but he decided to become a lawyer and he studied law with former council member and attorney, James Gettis. During the Civil War he was a strong supporter of secession and the Confederacy. He would go on to have a successful career as a lawyer, circuit judge, and a Florida Supreme Court Justice. Like fellow council member Ossian Bingley Hart, Henry Laurens Mitchell also became the Governor of Florida. He was Florida’s Sixteenth Governor, serving from 1893-1897. After his term as Governor he returned to Tampa where he served as Hillsborough County Treasurer. He died in Tampa on October 14, 1903. In 1915, Mitchell Elementary School was named after him.

Born in Georgia, Eli Lockhart worked in Tampa as a clerk. He had an interest in local politics and prior to his term on the City Council, he had served as City Treasurer in 1855. When Lockhart was elected in 1860, Tampa had grown to 885 inhabitants. Its population had more than doubled since the 1850 census, when 441 citizens had been counted. It was a time of great change for Tampa as the Civil War was coming. Florida seceded from the Union on January 10, 1861.
Josiah Ferris was the son of William Gould Ferris, Sr., a former City Council member. Born on August 5, 1836 in New Jersey, he came to Tampa in 1841 with his family. Ferris was active in the military. He enlisted during the Third Seminole War and later served in the Fourth Florida regiment. He was the co-owner of his father’s store and cattle business. Ferris also established a successful jewelry business after the Civil War. He became Tampa’s Acting Mayor when Edward A. Clarke unofficially left office in December of 1866. He was of the founders of St. Andrew’s Church in 1871. After his second term as a council member, Ferris was elected to serve as Tampa’s City Clerk and he held that position from 1877-1886. He died on November 24, 1901.

A Florida native, Bartholomew C. Leonardi was born on October 12, 1818. He was the brother of former council member Vincent Leonardi. Their last name was alternately spelled “Leonardy.” Bartholomew C. Leonardi bought a general store after the Civil War and had a successful career as a merchant. He also served as Tampa’s tax collector. Perhaps his most lasting contribution was eight acres of land that he purchased from freed persons Thomas and Elle Jackson. The land was located at what was then Tampa’s northwest boundary. He laid out ten blocks and offered these plots to African Americans. It was known as Leonardy’s Addition at the time and it would later become known as The Scrub. He died in Tampa on September 5, 1900.
Dr. William A. Lively was born in Kentucky and he returned to live there after spending much of the 1850s and 1860s in Tampa. He was elected Clerk of the Circuit Court in Hillsborough County in 1857. During the Civil War, Dr. Lively served as an Assistant Surgeon of the 20th Regiment of the Florida militia. In addition to serving on Tampa’s City Council, Dr. Lively was also elected to the Hillsborough County Board of County Commissioners. He died on June 22, 1907, in Kentucky.

Born in Georgia, Robert Flournoy Nuñez moved to Tampa in 1849. A clerk for the Kennedy & Darling General Store, he also participated in the Tampa Brass Cornet Band. He would later establish his own store in 1859, where he worked until selling it in 1862 to join the Confederate Army. He served as the Captain of Company B in the Seventh Florida Regiment alongside former council member James Gettis. They served primarily in Tennessee and Kentucky. Nuñez contracted pneumonia and was released in 1863. Though he returned to Tampa and was elected to the City Council, he never fully recovered from the disease and died while in office on January 25, 1868.
Cyrus Charles was the first African American elected to Tampa’s City Council. However this particular council had been elected based on their promise to dissolve the City’s government, so Charles and the other council members never had any formal meetings and declined to take their oaths of office. Born in Georgia, Charles came to Florida prior to the Civil War. He settled in Tampa at the southwest corner of Tampa and Harrison where he planted an orange grove. Charles was appointed by Governor Harrison Reed as one of two African Americans to serve on the Hillsborough County Commission from September 19, 1868 until February 1871. He operated a cedar mill with William J. Campbell, and in 1874, he received the county’s first grant of homestead title from the United States government.

Born in New York, John F. Fletcher was a baker by trade and owned the Florida Bakery, which was a popular Tampa establishment. He also served as Postmaster in the late 1860s. Like the others elected to the City Council during this time period, he did not actually serve and was elected based on his promise to dissolve the government. Fletcher lived a long life and died in Tampa in 1895 at the age of 93.
A native Floridian, Lawrence Masters was born in 1830. He was a carpenter by trade who lived on Florida Avenue. Masters was a member of the Tampa Brass Cornet Band, which included former council members such as John Darling, Vincent Leonardi, Josiah Ferris, and Robert Flournoy Nuñez. The band members wore uniforms made of scarlet flannel and gold lace. Like the others elected to the City Council in 1869, Masters did not actually serve and was elected based on his promise to dissolve the government. He would later go on to serve a regular term on Tampa’s Town Council from August 14, 1877 until August 14, 1878. He died in Tampa on March 10, 1894.

John A. McKay was the third son of James McKay Sr., who served as the Mayor of Tampa from 1859-1860. The McKay family was well known in Tampa for many years, with its members having successful business and political careers. Born on September 22, 1844 in Alabama, McKay came to Tampa with his parents. After serving in the Confederate Army during the Civil War, John A. McKay obtained a master mariner’s license and he became Deputy Collector of Customs in Tampa. Like the others elected to the City Council during this time period, he did not actually serve and was elected based on his promise to dissolve the government. John A. McKay had six children with his wife Mary Jane, including D.B. McKay, who was the Mayor of Tampa for more than thirteen years.
JAMES WILLIAMS

March 1, 1869 – August 11, 1873

Although James Williams had successfully campaigned along with fellow council members Cyrus Charles, John F. Fletcher, Lawrence Masters and John A. McKay to end City government, he wound up seeing firsthand the consequences of having no governmental services. James Williams was working as manager of the popular Florida Hotel, owned by James McKay Sr., when it caught fire in May of 1869. Because there was no government in place, no fire engine or fire fighters would arrive to extinguish the blaze and the building burnt to the ground.

HENRY L. CRANE

August 11, 1873 – August 1874
President, August 14, 1877 – August 14, 1878
President, August 14, 1883 – August 13, 1885
President, August 13, 1886 – July 15, 1887
March 4, 1892 – March 10 – 1893
March 10, 1893 - March 9, 1894

Henry L. Crane was born on September 25, 1838. Crane was elected as Tampa's City Clerk in 1869, but like the council members who were elected from 1869-1973, he never served due to the dissolution of the government. On Monday August 11, 1873, the registered voters in Tampa held an election and voted to establish the Town of Tampa. Crane was elected as one of the new council members. He would go on to serve a total of six terms on Tampa's City Council. He was the owner of a dry goods store called H. L. Crane & Company. Crane had previously worked for The Florida Peninsular and had served in the Confederate Army during the Civil War. Along with fellow council members Edward A. Clarke and Josiah Ferris as well as former council member William Gould Ferris, Sr., he was one of the founders of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church. He died on April 9, 1930.
WILLIAM T. HASKINS, SR.

August 11, 1873 – August 1874
President, August 14, 1878 – August 13, 1879
President, August 13, 1885 – August 13, 1886
August 13, 1886 – July 15, 1887
President, March 4, 1891 – August 7, 1891 (Resigned)

Born in South Carolina, William T. Haskins, Sr., was a merchant and a carpenter who came to Tampa and married Jeannette Collar, the daughter of Levi and Nancy Collar, two of Tampa’s earliest settlers. Haskins served five terms as a council member, and for three of his terms he was the Town Council President. His son, William T. Haskins, Jr., became Tampa’s City Marshal in 1887. William T. Haskins, Sr., died in Tampa on October 5, 1905.

JOHN THOMAS LESLEY

August 11, 1873 – August 1874

A Florida native, John Thomas Lesley was born on May 12, 1835. His father Leroy was an ordained minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1848, Reverend Lesley was assigned to the Methodist Hillsborough mission. He moved his family to a 30 acre tract of land near Lafayette Street. At the age of 13, John T. Lesley attended Tampa’s first community school which assembled in the county courthouse. He was working as a carpenter by age 16 and he helped his father build The First Methodist Church which was located at the corner of Lafayette and Morgan. Lesley would go on to serve in the Seminole Wars as well as the Civil War. He organized the Sunny South Guards, a volunteer company that later became the Fourth Florida Infantry Regiment and he also served in James McKay’s cow cavalry, defending cattle ranches during the war. After the war he purchased a saw mill and worked in the cattle trade. In 1876, Lesley was elected as Hillsborough County’s representative to the Florida House. In 1878, he was elected as a Florida
State Senator. He was one of the founders of the Tampa Electric Company (TECO), helping to bring electricity to Tampa in 1887. He died on July 13, 1913.

THOMAS EDWARD JACKSON

President, August 1875 – August 1876
August 1876 – August 14, 1877
August 12, 1881 – August 14, 1882
August 13, 1885 – July 15, 1887
March 8, 1888 – March 6, 1889

Noted as Town Council President from 1875-1876, Thomas Edward Jackson has the distinction of being the only council member listed during that time period in the official minute books. Born on July 9, 1852 in Tampa, Jackson was the son of former Tampa Mayor John Jackson. He attended Fordham University in New York and later worked as a real estate investor as well as in Tampa's customs house. He served a total of five terms on the council and went on to serve two terms as the Mayor of Tampa, first from August of 1877 until August of 1878 and again from March of 1889 until March of 1890. Jackson also served as a Hillsborough County Commissioner and he was one of the original members of Tampa's Board of Trade founded on May 7, 1885.

HENRY “HARRY” BRUMICK

August 1876 – August 14, 1877

A Florida native, Harry Brumick was the second African American elected to the council and the first to serve a full term as Cyrus Charles was elected to the council that helped eliminate Tampa's government. Brumick was a Republican and a supporter of the African Methodist Episcopal Church. He was a shoemaker by trade and also invested in real estate, owning four houses in Tampa. He was part of a committee to improve education for the African American community, which included fundraising for the Harlem Academy. Brumick died in Tampa on March 11, 1898.

WILLIAM BENTON HENDERSON

August 1876 – August 14, 1877
August 14, 1878 – August 13, 1879
President, August 13, 1879 – August 14, 1880
August 12, 1881 – August 14, 1882
August 14, 1882 – August 14, 1884
August 13, 1885 – July 15, 1887
July 15, 1887 – March 8, 1888
March 4, 1891 – March 4, 1892

Born on September 17, 1839 in Georgia, William Benton Henderson came to Tampa at a young age. He worked in the Kennedy & Darling General Store and purchased a small farm on the Alafia River in 1860. Henderson served in Company B. of the Florida Regiment during the Civil War but was discharged after one year because he had become ill with tuberculosis. Henderson recovered and returned to Tampa to enter the cattle business. He opened a general store in 1866 and later, with Captain John Miller, formed Miller & Henderson, which became Tampa’s largest store. With Miller he also founded the Tampa Steamship Company. Additionally, he was a partner with Henry Clay Giddens in the Henry Giddens Clothing Company, which sold men’s apparel. Henderson was the first foreman of Hook and Ladder Company No. 1, Tampa’s first volunteer fire department, which was organized in 1884. He was also one of the founders of Tampa’s Board of Trade in 1885. He was a successful real estate investor and with William H. Beckwith, he founded Beckwith & Henderson, a real estate firm. Henderson was active in many local businesses. He was the President of Tampa Commercial Company and the President of the Bank of West Tampa. He also served as the President of the State Board of Health as well as the Chairman of the Hillsborough County Commission. Henderson served a total of eight terms as a council member. He was a member of the Order of Odd Fellows and also served as a trustee of the First Methodist Church. He died in Tampa on May 7, 1909.
Dr. John Perry Wall, Sr., was born in Florida on September 17, 1836. He studied medicine and received his M.D. degree in 1858 from the Medical College of South Carolina. He moved to Fernandina, Florida and practiced there until the Civil War, when he offered his services to the Confederacy and worked in an army hospital in Virginia. He arrived in Tampa in 1869. After his wife Pressie died from yellow fever, Dr. Wall was one of the first to accurately conclude that the disease was spread by mosquitoes. He served as a public health officer and was appointed by a committee to address Tampa’s yellow fever epidemic. Dr. Wall served a total of five terms as a council member and one term as Mayor of Tampa, from August 14, 1878 until August 14, 1880. He was also President of the Board of Trade and assisted in founding both the Florida Medical Association as well as the Tampa Tribune. He died in Gainesville on April 18, 1895, while giving a speech at the annual meeting of the Florida Medical Association.

Born in Germany in 1833, John Henry Krause came to Tampa in the 1850s and established a blacksmith shop on Franklin Street. During the Civil War he served in the Confederate Army. When the war was over, he returned to Tampa where he owned a general store and manufactured wagons and carts. He was a real estate investor and at one time he was the sole owner of Sulphur Springs. In 1876, he was one of many to sign a petition to the Hillsborough County Commission calling for road improvements. He died in Tampa on July 8, 1900.
A Florida native, Joseph Baidsen Wall was born in 1847 in Hernando County. He attended law school at the University of Virginia and practiced law in Brooksville before coming to Tampa in 1872. He had a law office in Tampa where he was a partner with several different people, including Henry Laurens Mitchell, a former City Council member who would later be elected as the Governor of Florida. Wall became State Attorney in the Sixth Circuit and was later appointed as a Circuit Court Judge. In 1889, he was elected to the Florida State Senate. He died in Brooksville on December 21, 1911.

Originally from France, Joe Grillion was born on February 19, 1845. He came to the United States as a child with his family. Grillion worked in Tampa as a carpenter and lived on Madison Street. Like many of the other council members from this time period, he had served in the Confederate Army during the Civil War. He and his wife Amelia had five children. He died in Tampa on January 23, 1917.
An Alabama native, James E. Lipscomb was born on July 23, 1850. When he arrived in Tampa he worked at William W. Wall’s general store. Soon afterward, he went into business with former City Council member Christopher L. Friebele, and married his daughter, Mary. He became the youngest Mayor of Tampa when he was elected on August 11, 1873, at the age of twenty-three. In this position he was instrumental in improving transportation. New boat lines began to serve the port in 1871, and a stagecoach line was established between Tampa and Gainesville. Lipscomb died in Tampa on April 8, 1882.

Charles Wright was born in Jacksonville on November 27, 1846. During the Civil War he served in the Confederate Army as a Quartermaster who distributed supplies. He was a member of the Board of Trade in 1895. Years later Wright would become known, along with Lee B. Skinner, for his role in building the Hillsboro Hotel. When it opened in 1912, this hotel was eight stories tall and had over three hundred rooms, making it the largest commercial hotel in Florida. It was located on Florida Avenue and Madison Street. Wright was a charter member of the Elks Club and also served as a Clerk of the Circuit Court as well as a Collector of Customs. He died on August 24, 1926.
Born in Italy on May 19, 1816, Dominic Ghira was one of the first Italians to settle in Tampa permanently. He arrived around 1849, and had a homestead on Florida Avenue. Ghira also owned a saloon on the northeast corner of Jackson and Franklin. In 1864, he was appointed by the Hillsborough County Commission to serve as a ferryman for the ferry service across the Hillsborough River. Ghira worked as a merchant and owned property in downtown Tampa. He died in Tampa on May 22, 1897.

Horace H. Hale was born on November 16, 1839. He served in the Confederate Army and spent time in Florida and Virginia. After the Civil War he came to Tampa and is credited with being the floor manager during the ball following the 1877 Knights of Hillsborough Ring Tournament. This event was held annually and featured a competition with costumed knights on horseback competing with their swords to pick up rings that were suspended ten feet in the air. The winner who acquired the most rings had the privilege of naming the queen of the ball that followed the event. Hale worked as a merchant and a bookkeeper. He died in Tampa on May 2, 1894.
A native Floridian, Oliver J. Andreu was born on January 2, 1858. His name was occasionally incorrectly transcribed as “Andrew Oliver.” Originally from St. Augustine, Andreu was perhaps best known for establishing the Gulf Coast Progress newspaper in 1879. He died on December 2, 1891 in Tampa.

Robert B. Canning was born on November 1, 1859. His family had come to Florida from Scotland prior to his birth. He worked in Tampa as a merchant and a clerk. In 1882, he was one of many citizens to sign a petition asking members of the senate to either retain military ownership of Fort Brooke or to transfer the land to the public domain for all to enjoy. Canning resigned early from his term on the council in February of 1881, and a special election was held to replace him. He died in Tampa on January 14, 1928.
In 1880, Tampa had a population of 720 citizens, which was a small decrease from the 885 residents who were counted in 1860. However the 1880s would be a major turning point for Tampa with the coming of the railroad. By 1890, more than 5,000 people would be living in the city. Born in Georgia on December 10, 1851, Edward Carney came to Tampa and worked as a clerk. He died on May 10, 1922.

Born on September 18, 1855, Frank Ghira was the son of Dominic Ghira, who also served on the Town Council. The Ghira family worked as merchants and owned property. Frank Ghira was a member of Hook and Ladder Company No. 1, Tampa’s first volunteer fire department, which was organized in 1884. Ghira also worked at the G.D. Powell & Company real estate office. He died in Tampa on June 10, 1897, less than a month after his father Dominic’s death.
Elected to fill the vacancy after council member Robert B. Canning resigned, Warren Addison Givens was the son of former council member John T. Givens. Along with his father and many others who had served on the council, he was one of the founding members of the Board of Trade in 1885. He was elected three times as Clerk of the Circuit Court for Hillsborough County and he served as Tampa’s City Clerk from June of 1896 until June of 1898. He died on April 11, 1907.

Born in South Carolina on January 12, 1837, Matthew Ellison Haynsworth served in the Confederate Army before coming to Tampa in the 1870s. He had a business working as a tinsmith and a roofer. He was elected to the Town Council on August 14, 1880, and three days later he was elected Council President. On February 19, 1881, Mayor Henry Clarke Ferris was forced to resign because he moved outside the town limits. Haynsworth was sworn in as Acting Mayor, and he served until a special election was held the following month. On March 22, 1881, George Bascom Sparkman won the election and became Tampa’s 19th Mayor. Haynsworth returned to the council and completed his term. He died in Hernando County on November 9, 1917.
David R. Fisher was born in Georgia on August 15, 1846. When he arrived in Tampa he worked as a farmer and later became engaged in the cattle industry. Though he was elected to the Town Council for two years, Fisher resigned after his first year for undisclosed reasons. His vacancy was filled during the regular municipal election that was held in August of 1883. He died in Tampa on August 15, 1886.

Originally from Illinois, Phillip H. Collins came to Tampa and invested heavily in real estate, including a tract near Cypress Street which he developed with his son-in-law, George Benjamin. Collins owned additional land in this vicinity and he became instrumental in developing West Tampa and bringing cigar companies to the area. Along with former council member Frank Ghira, he was a member of Hook and Ladder Company No. 1, Tampa’s first volunteer fire department, which was organized in 1884. He died in Morris, Illinois in 1896.
SILAS A. JONES
August 13, 1884 – August 13, 1886

Born in Kentucky, Silas A. Jones came to Tampa in 1876 and worked as a developer, acquiring real estate and starting a builder’s supply company. With William H. Beckwith, he established the Jones & Beckwith real estate firm. He was one of the founding members of the Board of Trade as well as one of the founders of Tampa Street Railway Company, which was incorporated on February 12, 1885. He started the city’s first daily newspaper, the Tampa Daily Times in 1892. He helped establish the Tamiami Trail and later retired to North Carolina where he found a rhodolite deposit that led to the establishment of the town of Ruby City.

GEORGE BASCOM SPARKMAN
August 13, 1884 – August 13, 1886
March 4, 1891 – March 4, 1892

A Florida native, George Bascom Sparkman was born on September 20, 1855. He studied law at the University of Virginia Law School and returned to Tampa where he practiced law with his cousin, Stephen M. Sparkman, who would go on to serve in the United States Congress. Tampa’s Sparkman Channel got its name from Stephen M. Sparkman, who was instrumental in the dredging of the port. George Bascom Sparkman served a total of four terms as Mayor of Tampa, first from March 22, 1881 until August 14, 1883, and then as the first mayor to serve under the new City Charter, from July 15, 1887 until March 8, 1888. He also served as a Judge of the Sixth Circuit Court from 1893-1894. He died from yellow fever in Tampa on August 31, 1898.
A lawyer by profession, Harry L. Branch was the son of Dr. Franklin Branch and the nephew of Dr. Darwin Austin Branch, who served previously as the Mayor of Tampa as well as on Tampa's City Council. Branch was the proprietor of Tampa's first opera house which opened in 1884. Known as the Branch Opera House, it was a popular theatre in Tampa for many years. Branch died in Tampa on July 14, 1904.

Born in Plant City on January 6, 1860, Henry Laurens Knight came to Tampa in the early 1880s. He operated a hardware store called Clarke & Knight with Perry G. Wall, who was elected to the City Council in 1890. When the store opened, Perry G. Wall was still underage so the store used the name of his guardian, Edward A. Clarke. Clarke had served five terms on Tampa’s City Council as well as one term as the Mayor of Tampa. Later on the name of the store would be changed to Knight & Wall and it would become one of the most successful retail establishments in Tampa. Like former council members Frank Ghira and Phillip H. Collins, Knight was a member of Hook and Ladder Company No. 1, Tampa’s first volunteer fire department. Knight served a total of four terms as a council member. He was a founding member of the Board of Trade and was also a member of the Port Commission. He died on February 6, 1919.
Thomas Carson Taliaferro was born on July 19, 1859 in Virginia. He went to Jacksonville and joined the banking firm of Ambler, Marvin & Stockman, which would go on to found the Bank of Tampa in 1883. He came to Tampa to be a cashier for the bank which became known as the First National Bank in 1886. Taliaferro served as the bank’s president from 1903 until January of 1927, when he became Chairman of the Board. He and his wife Stella had five children. He died on April 11, 1928.

Born on February 7, 1845 in Ohio, James C. Field came to Tampa with the hope that the warm climate would cure his wife’s tuberculosis. Unfortunately she lost her battle with the disease. Field was the operator of a book store and stationary shop on Franklin Street. He also pursued a career in photography. The name of his company, Field & Morast, appears on many early photographs of Tampa. He died on March 22, 1934.
Originally from England, John Thomas Gunn was born on December 11, 1858. After he came to Tampa he established a wholesale grocery store called Gunn & Seckinger. He was a member of the Board of Trade, a Hillsborough County Commissioner and he also served on the County Board of Public Instruction. He served a total of four terms as a council member and served on the Appeals and Grievances Committee, the Finance Committee, the Sanitation Committee, the Schools and Public Buildings Committee, the Water Works, Fire Protection and Electricity Committee, and the Wharves, Bridges and Harbors Committee. He is perhaps best known for his namesake, Gunn Highway. As a County Commissioner, Gunn was instrumental in the development and paving of this road. He died on June 21, 1939.

On July 15, 1887, Tampa reorganized under a Special Act of the Florida State Legislature abolishing the governments of the Town of Tampa and the Town of North Tampa and establishing the charter for the City of Tampa. Ybor City was also incorporated in 1887. Silas L. Biglow was among the ten men elected to serve on Tampa’s City Council under the new charter. The owner of Tampa Transfer Company, Biglow was an active member of the community. He was part of an executive committee, with fellow council member Frederick M. Meyer, to address Tampa’s yellow fever epidemic. Biglow served five times on Tampa’s City Council. He became President of the City Council in August of 1891 after the resignation of Tampa’s first City Council established under the new charter passed an ordinance on September 6, 1887 that divided the city into four wards. Charles N. Brigham lived in the Fourth Ward on Eighth Avenue in Ybor City. He worked as a bookkeeper at Bustillo Brothers & Diaz, a cigar factory that had relocated to Tampa from Havana, Cuba. During Brigham’s first term as a council member Tampa was in the midst of one of its worst yellow fever epidemics. Many of the actions that the City Council tried to take during this time were delayed as a result of this crisis.

The owner of a grocery store called I.S. Giddens & Company, Isben S. Giddens was born in Georgia in 1858. He came to Tampa with three of his brothers: Marcus F. Giddens, who became a County Commissioner, Dr. John Giddens, a dentist and Henry Clay Giddens, a business man who would also serve on Tampa’s City Council. One of the original members of the Board of Trade founded in 1885, Isben S. Giddens also served as Hillsborough County Treasurer. He was the son-in-law of William T. Haskins. Then Biglow himself resigned in December of 1891 to become the first department head of the newly created Sanitation Department. His council seat was left vacant until the municipal election in March of 1892. He would go on to serve as the Chief of Sanitation in 1893 and Secretary of the Board of Public Works in 1898. He died on April 20, 1913. of former council member Robert Flournoy Nuñez, married to his daughter, Ruby Nuñez. He died in Tampa on March 27, 1916.

CHARLES E. HARRISON

President, July 15, 1887 – March 8, 1888
President, March 8, 1888 – March 6, 1889
President, March 6, 1889 – March 5, 1890
(Resigned on July 3, 1889)

A Florida native, Charles E. Harrison was born in Jacksonville on October 5, 1851. He studied law and came to Tampa in the 1870s. He would go on to have a distinguished career serving as a Hillsborough County judge for sixteen years. In 1915, he published a book called Pioneer Families of Tampa which has served as a valuable resource for genealogists. Judge Harrison also served as the Chairman of the Hillsborough County School Board and on the Board of Trustees of the First Methodist Church. He died in Tampa on May 18, 1920.

WILLIAM A. HONAKER

July 15, 1887 – March 8, 1888

Born on June 23, 1852, William A. Honaker came to Florida from Texas where he had a successful career as a merchant. He continued his career as a merchant in Tampa where he sold various housewares such as doors and blinds. Unfortunately he was affected by the yellow fever epidemic of 1887-1888. He and his daughter both succumbed to the disease. He died in Tampa shortly after the term he served on the City Council on August 14, 1888.
After City Council President Charles E. Harrison resigned during Fred M. Meyer’s third term, Meyer was appointed City Council President for the remainder of the term. He had been serving on an executive committee, with fellow council member Silas L. Biglow, to address Tampa’s yellow fever epidemic. The city had a reprieve from the disease for over a decade due to the quarantines that had been developed by Dr. John Perry Wall, but in September of 1887, it was once again a problem. During his time in office, Meyer worked toward improving sanitation through ordinances that were passed to clean up the city and improve public health.

One of the founding members of the Board of Trade in 1885, James E. Mitchell was the nephew of Henry Laurens Mitchell, former council member and Governor of Florida. He was a real estate developer who had plans to build a railway. Unfortunately Mitchell did not get the opportunity to serve much of his term as he died while in office on November 26, 1887.
JOSEPH A. WALKER
July 15, 1887 – March 8, 1888

Joseph A. Walker was the third African American to be elected to Tampa’s City Council and the first to be elected under the new City Charter. Born in Mississippi on May 18, 1853, he came to Tampa with his older brother. He worked as a carpenter and was a member of the Knights of Labor. After his term on the City Council, Walker worked as a grocer. He died in Tampa on January 8, 1918.

CANDIDO ANGEL MARTINEZ YBOR
July 15, 1887 – March 8, 1888

The son of Vicente Martinez Ybor, founder of Ybor City, Candido Angel Martinez Ybor was the first Hispanic to be elected under the new City Charter. Like his father, he worked in the cigar industry. Ybor worked with Emilio Pons, who later served as a council member, to establish a cigar factory called Emilio Pons & Company in 1887. He was a member of the Cherokee Club, a popular gathering place for cigar manufacturers and influential men in Ybor City. He died in Manhattan on November 25, 1901.
Born in 1838, Dr. Hiram M. Bruce served in the Union Army in the Second Ohio Calvary during the Civil War. He came to Tampa after the war and practiced medicine. He was a doctor by profession as was his wife, Dr. Orpha Baldwin. In addition to his successful medical practice, he also opened the St. James Hotel in 1884. Advertisements for the hotel show that it offered a billiard room as well as 405 feet of verandas. Election results for Dr. Bruce’s second City Council term resulted in a tie between the candidates for the Second Ward, North Tampa. Dr. Bruce won the runoff and was sworn in on April 2, 1890. He died in Tampa in 1922.

Robert Andrew Jackson was the son of Nancy Collar Jackson and Robert Jackson, two of Tampa’s earliest settlers. He was born in Tampa in 1852 and had a successful career in real estate. He was one of the co-founders of Tampa Electric Company (TECO) in 1887, and was elected twice as the Sherriff of Hillsborough County. He died in Tampa in 1915.
Born in Cuba, Manuel Rodriquez came to Tampa to work in the cigar industry. With George T. Chamberlain, he was elected to represent the Fourth Ward, Ybor City. During the late 1800s, Ybor City was in the height of its development. New cigar factories were opening regularly and with the influx of workers came the demand for more restaurants and shops. It was an exciting time to be in Tampa as new developments were taking place every day.

George T. Chamberlain was born on February 2, 1848. He lived in Ybor City for many years and he was instrumental in developing land for the cigar industry. Chamberlain was active in the community and served as Treasurer of the Hillsborough County Real Estate Agency. He was also one of the founders of the Board of Trade and he served as Secretary and Treasurer for the Ybor City Land and Improvement Company. He served a total of four terms on Tampa’s City Council. Chamberlain died in Tampa on February 26, 1901.
Originally from Scotland, Archibald Ross was a grocer, baker and confectioner by trade. He laid Tampa’s first sidewalk, which was made out of Georgia marble, around his bakery on Franklin Street and Lafayette, which is present-day Kennedy Boulevard. Remnants from the sidewalk can still be seen at this location where a historic marker was engraved into the marble. Ross contested the results of the March 4, 1891 City Council race in which Herman Glogowski was elected to serve in the third at-large council seat. The votes were examined and recounted and Ross was declared official winner, taking office on June 5, 1891. He died in Tampa on May 1, 1899.

Born in 1845, Chauncey L. Ayres was a watchmaker and a jeweler who also offered taxidermy services. He was one of the founding members Tampa’s Board of Trade as well as one of the original members of Hook and Ladder Company No. 1, Tampa’s first volunteer fire department. He did not settle in Tampa permanently and died in Missouri in 1924.
When Charles E. Harrison resigned from the City Council on July 3, 1889, Alfonso Garcia won the special election held on August 20, 1889 to fill his vacancy. He had political aspirations and in 1895, he had run in West Tampa’s first mayoral race but was defeated by Fernando Figueredo. When he served on Tampa’s City Council he was assigned to the Police Committee, the Ordinances Committee, and the Streets, Alleyways and Buildings Committee.

Election results from the March 6, 1889 race revealed a tie in the race for the second council seat of Tampa’s Third Ward. A special election was held later in the month to fill the vacancy. William W. Hooper won the runoff and was sworn in on March 30, 1889. One of the original developers of West Tampa, Hooper was born on December 12, 1847. He worked as a customs inspector and also had a successful career in real estate. He served a total of three terms on Tampa’s City Council and participated in the Schools and Public Buildings Committee, the Appeals and Grievances Committee, and the Cemeteries, Hospitals and Charitable Institutions Committee. He died on July 26, 1930.
RAFAEL S. PEÑA

March 6, 1889 – March 5, 1890
March 4, 1891 – March 4, 1892

A resident of Ybor City, Rafael S. Peña worked as a notary public and his wife Nisida was a teacher. Their children worked in the cigar industry. When he was elected to serve on Tampa’s City Council on March 6, 1889, Peña was appointed to the Sanitation Committee, and the Wharves, Bridges and Harbors Committee. He continued to serve on the Sanitation Committee when he was elected for his second term.

DUFF POST

March 6, 1889 – March 5, 1890

A Tampa native, Duff Post was born in 1854. He was the son of Tampa’s Fifth Mayor, Madison Post, and he was also elected as Mayor of Tampa serving from August 14, 1883 until August 13, 1886 and March 4, 1891 until March 4, 1892. Duff Post had a successful dental practice as well as a restaurant and ice cream parlor in the Masonic Lodge building in downtown Tampa. He served as Tampa’s City Marshal from 1881 until 1883 and as Tampa’s Postmaster from 1891 until 1893. He served at an exciting time in Tampa’s history when cigar factories and the railroad were creating new opportunities and drawing more people to the city. Post worked on civic improvements and was also a member of the Board of Trade. He died in Tampa on May 19, 1915.
FREDERICK A. SALOMONSON
March 6, 1889 – March 5, 1890
March 4, 1892 – March 10, 1893

Originally from the Netherlands, Frederick A. Salomonson was born on July 20, 1860. He came to the United States in 1882 representing a Dutch syndicate which had purchased land in Florida. He decided to stay in the area and worked first in Jacksonville for the railroad before settling in Tampa in 1884. Salomonson entered the real estate business and cofounded the Tampa Real Estate and Loan Association in 1887 with John Fessenden. Following his City Council term he was elected as the Mayor of Tampa, first from March 10, 1893 to March 9, 1894, with a second term from March 8, 1895 until June 5, 1896, and a third term from June 5, 1904 to June 5, 1906. During his time as mayor he focused on capital improvement projects to support Tampa’s growing population. He died on December 19, 1911.

JOSE GONZALEZ ELIAS
March 5, 1890 – March 4, 1891

Elected to represent Ybor City, Tampa’s Fourth Ward, Jose Gonzalez Elias served on the Police Committee, the Appeals and Grievances Committee, and the Hospital Committee. The City Council that served during this time period had the privilege of working in Tampa’s brand new City Hall building, completed in 1890 at a cost of $10,000. It housed the police and fire departments as well as all the administrative offices of the City of Tampa. This building was located in the same location as present-day City Hall, which was completed in 1915.
Like fellow council member Jose Gonzalez Elias, George E. Harris was elected to represent the Fourth Ward of Ybor City. He was a cigar maker by trade. Harris was selected to serve on the Ordinances Committee, The Sanitation Committee, and the Wharves, Bridges and Harbors Committee. In 1890, the City of Tampa was growing at a tremendous rate. The 1880 census had counted 720 residents and in 1890, there were more than 5,500 people living in the city. By 1900, about 15,000 people would be living in Tampa. George E. Harris died in Tampa in 1924.

A shoe merchant by trade, David S. Macfarlane also worked in real estate and was a notary public. He was the brother of Hugh C. Macfarlane, who practiced law and was well known for his development of West Tampa. The Macfarlane family came from Scotland to the United States in 1865. They settled first in the Boston area before coming to Tampa in the 1880s. David S. Macfarlane was a member of the Board of Trade and had a successful business selling shoes downtown. During his term on the City Council he served on the Sanitation Committee, the Hospitals Committee, and the Streets, Alleys and Buildings Committees. He lived near downtown Tampa on Florida Avenue.
John C. Papy

March 5, 1890 – March 4, 1891
March 4, 1891 – March 4, 1892

Born on December 18, 1843, John C. Papy worked as a cattle inspector. During the Civil War he served in Company K. of the 8th Florida Infantry and was discharged in February of 1862. He was part of the committee that was organized to address the yellow fever outbreak in 1887. Along with fellow council member Silas L. Biglow, Papy was elected to represent Tampa’s Third Ward. He served on the Police Committee, and the Hospital Committee. He died on April 26, 1893.

Henry “Hal” H. Scarlett

March 5, 1890 – March 4, 1891

Hal Scarlett was born in 1858 and worked in Tampa as a grocer and a contractor. When Henry Plant’s railroad came to Tampa he was the conductor on the line that went from Plant City to Tampa. Scarlett was elected to Tampa’s City Council on March 5, 1890 to represent Tampa’s First Ward, which was the downtown area covering the old Town of Tampa. He served on the Fire Committee, the Police Committee, and the Streets, Alleys and Buildings Committee. He died in 1934.
AMOS L. SHAW

March 5, 1890 – March 4, 1891
June 5, 1902 – May 10, 1903
(Resigned)

Elected to represent Tampa’s Third Ward, Amos L. Shaw was born on August 22, 1849. He initially worked as a carpenter and then became a partner at Shaw & Johnson, an architectural and building firm. During his terms on Tampa’s City Council, he was on the Finance Committee, the Schools and Public Buildings Committee, the Water Works, Fire Protection and Electricity Committee, as well as the Wharves, Bridges and Harbors Committee. Shaw served as the President of the Board of Trade in 1922. He died in Tampa on March 17, 1930.

PERRY G. WALL

March 5, 1890 – March 4, 1891
March 8, 1895 – June 5, 1896
(Mayor Commissioner, January 8, 1924 – January 3, 1928)

Perry G. Wall was born in Hernando County on November 22, 1867. He was named after his grandfather, Perry Green Wall, and was therefore sometimes referred to as Perry G. Wall II. He was the nephew of Dr. John Perry Wall, who served on the City Council, and was the Sixteenth Mayor of Tampa. His father died in 1878 and Edward A. Clarke became Wall’s guardian. Clarke had served five terms on Tampa’s City Council and one term as the Mayor of Tampa. Since he was surrounded by men with political careers, it is not surprising that he followed in their footsteps. With his friend Henry Laurens Knight, who had also been a council member, Wall established a very successful hardware store. It was first called Clarke & Knight due to Wall being underage at the time of its opening. Later on the store was called Knight & Wall. In addition to his terms on Tampa’s City Council, Wall was elected as Mayor Commissioner of Tampa under the Commission-Manager government. system and served from January 8, 1924 to January 3, 1928. He was appointed Harbormaster of Tampa and held that position from 1932 until 1936. He died in Tampa on January 25, 1944.

ROBERT F. WEBB
President, March 5, 1890 – March 4, 1891

Originally from Indiana, Robert F. Webb was in the hotel business. When he came to Tampa he worked first as the proprietor of the Palmetto Hotel and then as the owner of the DeSoto Hotel. Located on Marion Street, this was a popular hotel in Tampa for many years. Webb was elected to the Board of Public Works in June of 1898. He died on July 20, 1904.

LAMONT BAILEY
September 9, 1891 – March 4, 1892
(President from December 10, 1891 – March 4, 1892)

The September 9, 1891 to March 4, 1892 term of Tampa’s City Council was particularly tumultuous due to two resignations and contested election results. An editor for the Tampa Tribune, Lamont Bailey had served as Tampa’s City Clerk from August 13, 1886 until March 5, 1891. He was elected to fill the vacancy after City Council President William T. Haskins resigned. Then Silas L. Biglow, who became President following the resignation of Haskins, also resigned to become the head of the newly formed Sanitation Department. Lamont Bailey served as President after Silas L. Biglow resigned.
HERMAN GLOGOWSKI

March 4, 1891 – June 5, 1891

Born in Germany on April 29, 1853, Herman Glogowski came to Florida via New York, where he spent a number of years working in the garment industry. When he arrived in Tampa in 1884, he opened a men’s clothing store on Washington Street. On August 13, 1886 he became Tampa’s first Jewish mayor. Although he served a total of four non-consecutive terms as the Mayor of Tampa, his singular City Council term was cut short when Archibald Ross contested the election results. Both Ross and Glogowski had been running for one of the at-large council seats. The votes were examined and recounted and Ross was declared the official winner. Glogowski was removed the same day that Ross took office on June 5, 1891. He went on to serve his fourth term as the Mayor of Tampa from March 4, 1892 – March 10, 1893. He died on December 3, 1909 as the result of a tragic accident when the buggy in which he was riding collided with a truck in Ybor City.

HENRY KRUSE

March 4, 1891 – March 4, 1892

June 8, 1898 – June 8, 1900

Henry Kruse was born in Germany on February 10, 1856, and immigrated to the United States in 1875. He worked in downtown Tampa as a merchant and tailor with a residence in the Hyde Park neighborhood. During his City Council terms he served on the Appeals and Grievances Committee, the Cemeteries, Hospitals and Charitable Institutions Committee, the Sanitation Committee, and the Wharves, Bridges and Harbors Committee. He died on February 1, 1942.
GEORGE R. MACFARLANE
March 4, 1891 – March 4, 1892

Born in Scotland on May 21, 1861, George R. Macfarlane was the cousin of David S. Macfarlane and Hugh C. Macfarlane. They shared Thomas Macfarlane as a grandfather and their fathers were brothers. Hugh C. Macfarlane is credited as the founder of West Tampa. George R. Macfarlane worked as an insurance agent and also had a position with the United States Customs. During his term on the City Council, he was chosen to serve on the Police Committee, the Streets, Alleys and Roads Committee, and also the Appeals and Grievances Committee. Like fellow council member Henry Kruse, he lived in Hyde Park. George R. Macfarlane died in Tampa on April 27, 1915.

J.J. BELL
March 4, 1891 – March 4, 1892

Elected to represent the Fourth Ward of Ybor City with fellow council member Rafael S. Peña, J.J. Bell was on the Wharves, Bridges and Harbors Committee, and he also served as the Chair of the Cemetery Committee. When Bell and the other council members took office on March 4, 1891, just a month had passed since Henry B. Plant’s opulent Tampa Bay Hotel opened with a grand ball on February 5, 1891.
A cigar factory lector, Ramon Rivero y Rivero was the editor of Cuba, an Ybor City newspaper dedicated to the cause of Cuban independence. José Martí, a leader in the Cuban Revolution, came to Tampa many times to speak, raise funds and garner volunteers in the pursuit of Cuba’s independence from Spain. In 1891, Rivero transcribed Martí’s speeches and printed them at his newspaper offices where they were disseminated to the Cuban communities in Key West and New York the following day. There is a historical marker in Ybor City noting this event and its importance in founding the Cuban Revolutionary Party. On Tampa’s City Council, Rivero was elected as a councilman at-large and he chaired both the Police Committee and the Appeals Committee.

HARRY BURKE

April 2, 1907 – June 4, 1908

Elected to fill the vacancy created when William F. Himes resigned from the City Council, Harry Burke worked as a clerk at Knight & Wall, the store owned by former council members Harry Laurens Knight and Perry G. Wall. He also had a sign painting business. Burke served on the Ordinances and Rules Committee, the Schools and Public Buildings Committee, the Streets, Alleys and Buildings Committee, and the Water Works, Fire Protection and Electricity Committee.

WILLIAM FRASER HIMES

June 8, 1906 – March 26, 1907
(Resigned)

Born in New Orleans on January 22, 1879, William Fraser Himes came to Florida with his parents when he was a young child. He studied law in Tallahassee before moving to Tampa in 1902. Himes continued to practice law in Tampa and went on to serve in the Florida Senate from 1913 until 1917. One of his greatest accomplishments as a senator was introducing a bill that created the State Road Department. He was part of the law firm Whitaker, Himes and Whitaker. William Fraser Himes was President of the Hillsborough County Bar Association. In 1916, he represented the developers of the Gray Gables subdivision and one of its main streets, Himes Avenue, was named in his honor. He died on November 10, 1945. His son, John R. Himes, followed in his footsteps and established a successful legal career, later becoming a criminal court judge. In 1964, John’s wife Elizabeth Himes, became the first woman elected to public office in Hillsborough County when she was elected to the county Hospital and Welfare Board.
Currie J. Hutchinson was a pharmacist, or as the profession was called at the time, a druggist. He worked at Morton’s Big Store on Franklin Street and later became the President of Snow Drug Company. He was elected to represent the First Ward, downtown Tampa. Hutchinson served on the Appeals and Grievances Committee, the Cemeteries, Hospitals and Charitable Institutions Committee, the Finance Committee, and the Police Department Committee. He died in Tampa on December 3, 1939.

Elected to represent the Second Ward, North Tampa, Hubert D. King was born in Missouri in 1874. He came to Tampa and worked first as a bookkeeper and later as a manager at the F. Garcia & Brothers Cigar Factory. In 1903, he was one of the first four people ever to purchase an automobile from Fred Ferman. The first four cars Ferman sold were Oldsmobiles. King enjoyed his new vehicle so much that he started his own car dealership called the Hubert King Motor Car Company. He died in 1939.
Irving B. Miller was elected to represent the Second Ward, North Tampa. He was the manager of Gulf City Painting and Decorating, worked as a painter and was a member of the Painter’s Union. During his City Council term he served on the Streets, Alleys and Buildings Committee, the Street Lighting Committee, and the Wharves, Bridges and Harbors Committee.

The Vice President of Tierra del Lago Cigar Company, James A. Roberts was elected to represent the Fourth Ward, Ybor City. During his City Council term he was on the Police Department Committee, the Sanitation Committee, and the Schools and Public Buildings Committee. He also served as the Secretary and Treasurer of the State Federation of Labor in 1904 and 1907.
Originally from Puerto Rico, Carlos Toro came to Ybor City to work in the cigar industry. He was a cigar manufacturer and the owner of Carlos Toro & Company, which was located on 7th Avenue. Toro was elected for two terms in a row. During his first term, Tampa still had just four wards and he was elected to represent the Fourth Ward, Ybor City. In 1908, Tampa’s charter was revised to include nine wards. This was a reflection of the city’s growing population. Toro represented the Eighth Ward during his second term. He served on the Ordinances and Rules Committee, the Streets, Alleys and Buildings Committee, and the Water Works and Fire Protection Committee.

James E. Etzler was born in 1877 in Washington, DC. He lived in Newport News, Virginia before coming to Tampa in 1904 as a traveling representative of the Washington Block & Asphalt Company. Once in Tampa he had a number of different careers including saloon operator, contractor, real estate agent and he was also the owner of a dairy. His first term on Tampa’s City Council was cut short when he was accused of misconduct. Etzler had made a deal outside of the council to secure a contract and he did not realize he was doing business with a hired detective. The attempted negotiation was exposed and the council voted 8 to 2 to expel Etzler on October 13, 1908. He later challenged the ruling in the Florida Supreme Court, claiming he had been framed. He lost the case but he was reelected to Tampa’s City Council for four consecutive terms beginning in 1912.
During his time on the City Council he served on the Public Buildings Committee, the Streets and Alleys Committee, the Hospital and Cemetery Committee, the Finance Committee, the Street Lighting Committee, the Wharves, Bridges and Harbors Committee, and the Police Department Committee. He died in office on June 24, 1920, shortly after beginning his fifth term.

After James E. Etzler was expelled from the City Council, Offim Falk was nominated by council member Carlos Toro to take his place, and he would go on to serve a total of three City Council terms. In fact, when Etzler was reelected to the council in 1910, they both served together for four years. Offim Falk was a Russian who immigrated to the United States in 1889, living first in Key West before coming to Tampa in 1895. He purchased a store owned by J.T. Burch and expanded the property, creating a very successful retail establishment called O. Falk’s Department Store that sold dry goods, clothing and shoes. During his time on Tampa’s City Council he participated in the Police Department Committee, and the Schools and Public Buildings Committee. He was an active member of the Kiwanis Club, a member of the Palma Ceia Golf Club, and was the President of the Congregation Schaarai Zedek. He died in 1941. His son, David A. Falk, was on the Board of Trustees at the University of Tampa and the school’s Falk Theatre is named in his honor.
Born in Kentucky on April 3, 1874, Charles T. Friend moved to Florida with his parents as a child. He came to Tampa in the early 1890s and worked as a general contractor, later establishing his own building firm that constructed several cigar factories and also offered real estate services. On Tampa’s City Council he was a member of the Sanitation Committee, and the Ordinances and Rules Committee. Friend also served as Chairman of the Board of County Commissioners from 1921 until 1925. He was a member of the Board of Trade. He died on November 21, 1954.

Like fellow council member Charles T. Friend, William J. Houlihan was originally from Kentucky. After he arrived in Tampa, Houlihan worked as a real estate agent. During his three consecutive terms on Tampa’s City Council, he participated in the Finance Committee, the Cemeteries, Hospitals and Charitable Institutions Committee, the Schools and Public Buildings Committee, the Water Works and Fire Protection Committee, and the Streets, Alleys and Buildings Committee. He died in office on March 23, 1914.
Herman H. Reneger was born in Germany on January 11, 1879 and came to the United States with his family as a child. He worked as a salesman for the Tampa Daily Herald and later became the City of Tampa's Tax Assessor. During his City Council terms he was a proponent of the Commission-Manager form of government which was something Tampa adopted in 1920. Regener served on the Sanitation Committee, the Water Works, Fire Protection and Electricity Committee, the Ordinances and Rules Committee, and the Wharves, Bridges and Harbors Committee. He died on August 30, 1956.

The son of an Ybor City cigar maker, Ramon Sierra, Jr., was born in 1881. He immigrated with his parents to the United States from Spain. He worked at his family-owned business, a clothing and dry goods store called Sierra & Sons and later, Ramon & Sons. On Tampa's City Council he participated in the Appeals and Grievances Committee, the Street Lighting Committee, the Cemeteries, Hospitals and Charitable Institutions Committee, the Parks Committee, and the Wharves, Bridges and Harbors Committee. His father lived to be one hundred years old and Ramon Sierra, Jr., had a similarly long life. He died in Tampa at the age of 90 in 1971.
Elected to represent Tampa’s Fifth Ward, Thomas B. Smith was a Florida native. He was elected as the Mayor of Plant City and served in that position from 1891 until 1892. He was on the Schools and Public Buildings Committee, the Water Works, Fire Protection and Electricity Committee, and the Wharves, Bridges and Harbors Committee.

Born in Florida on August 2, 1877, Arthur Fred Turner often went by his middle name or initials. Along with Louis Wilson, he was the owner of Turner & Wilson, a coffee roasting company. He served as the Secretary of the Young Men’s Christian Association (YMCA) from 1912 until 1924. On Tampa’s City Council he participated in the Cemeteries, Hospitals and Charitable Institutions Committee, the Police Department Committee, and the Street Lighting Committee. Later in life Turner became an ordained minister and he was a pastor at the First Methodist Church of Tampa. He died in Jacksonville on September 26, 1956.
Fred W. Ball served four consecutive terms as the President of Tampa’s City Council. He was born on July 20, 1880 in Tallahassee and studied at Eastman Business College. In 1897, he came to Tampa to join his brother, Charles, at his real estate firm. Ball soon found that he had an interest in politics and he devoted a significant amount of time to a career in public service. After spending a decade as Tampa’s City Council President, he was elected to the Hillsborough County Board of County Commissioners where he served for twenty-two years with fourteen of those years being spent as Chairman. During this time he advocated for Palma Ceia Spring to become a public park. His efforts were successful and the park is now named Fred Ball Park in his honor. For many years he was an active member of the West Coast Inland Waterway Commission. Ball also served as an advisor to the National Rivers and Harbors Congress in 1955. He died on November 24, 1958.

Born in London, England in 1879, William James Barritt immigrated to the United States at a young age. His family settled in Florida in the 1880s and cultivated an orange grove near Sanford. They lost the grove due to a harsh freeze during the winter of 1895 and they came to Tampa soon afterward. Barritt found success in the dairy business and he established the Poinsettia Dairy just west of the Tampa Bay Hotel. In 1903, it became the first distributor of bottled milk in Tampa. Barritt began producing ice cream in 1910, and Poinsettia Dairy went on to become one of the largest dairy companies in the state of Florida. After it was bought out by Catherine Genevieve Pisacane was born in New York City on May 23, 1932 and came to Florida with her family as a child. After graduating from Hillsborough High School she married Fernando Barja. She first ran for City Council, District Seven in 1967, but lost to Kenneth E. Schleman. When she ran against him again in 1971, she won, becoming the first woman ever elected to the City Council. She was also the first woman to serve as Acting Chair Pro-Tempore. She was appointed to this position following Richard L. Cheney’s death when Lloyd Copeland became Acting Mayor and Lee Duncan was appointed as Acting Chair. Barja served in this role from June 20, 1974 until October 4, 1974. She was reelected for a second term in 1975 and then resigned in 1978 to run for the Hillsborough County Commission. In 1986, she returned to the City Council when she was appointed to fill Sandra Warshaw Freedman’s vacant seat after Freedman became Acting Mayor. Legally blind, Barja is an active member of the Hillsborough County Citizens for Disabilities and the Tampa chapter of the National Federation of the Blind. In 2013, she received the Josephine Howard Stafford Memorial Award from the City of Tampa in honor of her achievements and her outstanding commitment to the community. She died on March 19, 2018.

After defeating incumbent Sam Mirabella in a runoff election Joe Kotvas took office to represent District Two on November 9, 1971. He was born on March 25, 1943 in New York City, where he had worked as a transit police officer prior to moving to...
Tampa in 1968. During his time on the City Council, Kotvas made improvements to Tampa’s housing projects and also assisted the Fire Department in acquiring a fireboat from Pittsburgh. In 1974, he resigned from the council to run for mayor but lost to William F. Poe. He regained his council seat in 1978, when he was appointed to fill the District Two vacancy caused when Jan Kaminis Platt resigned to run for the Hillsborough County Commission. In 1980, Kotvas was elected to the Hillsborough County Commission as well and he served there with Platt for several years. In 1983, with fellow County Commissioners Fred Anderson and Jerry Bowmer, Kotvas was arrested during a public corruption investigation that charged the commissioners with taking bribes to secure favorable zoning votes. He served five years in a federal prison. After his release, Kotvas received his license as an X-Ray technician and worked at Tampa General Hospital. In 2012, he self-published a book called Men of the Invisible War about the Japanese occupation of the Aleutian chain of islands off the coast of Alaska during World War II.

December 3, 1991 – March 31, 1995
(Suspended by Governor Chiles on July 3, 1991 and reinstated on December 3, 1991.)

Nearly one hundred years had passed since a black man had been elected to Tampa’s City Council when Perry Curtis Harvey, Jr., took office. The last black man to serve on Tampa’s City Council had been Joseph A. Walker, who was in office from 1887 until 1888. Harvey was the first black man elected in the twentieth century. He was born in Thomasville, Georgia on September 14, 1930, graduating from Tampa's Middleton High School and Morehouse College in Atlanta. Harvey served in the United States Army during the Korean War. In 1973, he succeeded his father as President of the International Longshoreman's Association (I.L.A.) Local No. 1402. He served on the City Council for three terms totaling nearly twelve years, during which time he was a strong advocate for minority businesses. In 1991, he was suspended from the council for five months by Governor Lawton Chiles when he was indicted on charges of taking money from I.L.A. Local No. 1402 where he was still President. Les Miller was elected to fill his vacant council seat until Harvey was cleared on the charges by a federal jury and returned to office. In 1993, he received an award with Sylvia Kimbell, a Hillsborough County Commissioner, from the Tampa/Hillsborough County Human Rights Council. He died on September 12, 2012.

JOSEPH “JOE” GRECO

December 8, 1988 – March 31, 1991

Chair, March 31, 1991 – April 1, 1995

April 1, 1995 – June 1, 1998

(Resigned; Appointed Hillsborough County Tax Collector)

Elected to fill the vacancy in District One that occurred when Tom Vann resigned to run for the Hillsborough County Commission, Joe Greco was born in Tampa on April 18, 1936 and graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree in Business Administration from the University of Tampa, and a Master of Arts degree in Education from the University of Florida. A long time educator, Greco founded the Hillsborough County Peer Coordinator Council. He received the Florida School Counselors Association’s Administrator of the Year award, and an Outstanding Service Award from the Florida Association of Peer Helping Leaders. He served as Chair during his second term on the City Council and also as a Director for the Florida League of Cities. His third term ended early when Governor Chiles appointed him to serve as Hillsborough County Tax Collector. Greco went on to establish a career in real estate, banking and residential property management.
A Tampa native, Linda Saul-Sena was born on April 30, 1951. She attended Gorrie Elementary School, Wilson Middle School, and Plant High School. She graduated from Tulane University, and completed coursework at Harvard University’s Kennedy School of Government. Prior to her election, she worked as an urban planner and at the Tampa Museum of Art. Saul-Sena served longer than any other woman on Tampa’s City Council, with a total of five terms spanning more than nineteen years. She served on the Public Art, Transportation, and Public Safety Committees and as the Chair of the Building and Zoning Committee. She served on and chaired the Metropolitan Planning Organization as well as the Hillsborough Area Regional Transit (HART) board. During her time in office Saul-Sena strongly supported historic preservation projects in addition to environmental protection, which resulted in the creation of two separate round table groups to work on these issues. In 1995, she was named Cultural Contributor of the Year by the Greater Tampa Chamber of Commerce. Saul-Sena has also received the Bob Graham Architectural Awareness Award from the Florida American Institute of Architects, the Outstanding Elected Official Award from the Florida American Planning Association and the Brown Bear Award from the Tampa Bay Sierra Club. She is currently a contributor to Creative Loafing where she writes an Urban Landscape column and hosts “Culture Vultures” on the Tampa Bay Community Network. She has been married to Mark Sena for over 29 years and they have two daughters, Aliza and Gabrielle.

March 31, 1991 – April 1, 1995
Chair, April 1, 1995 – October 21, 1998
(Suspended by Governor Chiles)

Ronnie Mason was born in Tampa on August 14, 1930, and graduated from Hillsborough High School. Prior to his election to the City Council, he had worked for twenty-eight years in the City of Tampa’s Fire Department where he had served as Fire Chief from 1976 until 1979. He had also run several businesses including a sporting goods store and a used car dealership. Mason served three consecutive terms on the City Council and he was Chair of the Public Safety Committee. During his third term he was elected Chair but was removed from office in October of 1998 by Governor Chiles after he was indicted on extortion charges in a bid to enter the ambulance business with City Council Attorney David Carr. The charges against both of them were later dropped and Mason retired from politics. He remains active in the community, participating in events for Tampa General Hospital and other charitable organizations.
